ART OF POETRY

THE POETICAL TREATISES OF

ORACE, VIDA, AND BOILEAU

WITH THE TRANSLATIONS BY

HOWES, PITT, AND SOAME

EDITED

WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY

ALBERT S. COOK

Professor of the English Language and Literature in Yale University

BOSTON, U.S.A.
PUBLISHED BY GINN & COMPANY
1892
COPYRIGHT, 1892,

BY ALBERT S. COOK.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

TYPOGRAPHY BY J. S. CUSHING & CO., BOSTON, U.S.A.

PRESSWORK BY GINN & CO., BOSTON, U.S.A.
TO

JACOB COOPER

PROFESSOR OF THE GREEK LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE
IN RUTGERS COLLEGE

IN GRATEFUL AND AFFECTIONATE REGARD
PREFACE.

A COLLECTION in some respects similar to this was made by the Abbé Batteux in 1771, and published at Paris in two volumes. Besides Horace, Vida, and Boileau, it contained Aristotle's Poetics, and was entitled Les Quatre Poëtiques. The translations were by Batteux, and in French prose. The notes are partly original and partly selected; some are in Latin, some in French; and they are of all degrees of helpfulness. Batteux's collection is now virtually inaccessible, and, were it common, would not appeal strongly to the English-speaking student. Considering the historic importance and intrinsic value of these treatises, there seemed, then, a sufficient reason for joining them anew. The exclusion of Aristotle has been dictated by the impossibility of sufficiently illustrating his treatise within the necessary limits of space, and by the fact that the Latin tradition admits of clearer exposition when segregated from the chief source of Hellenic theory.

For the text of Horace I have relied chiefly upon Wickham, though I have collated Orelli's third edition, and have here and there adopted a reading of his. The analytical summaries in the notes are also by Wickham. The notes to this part include, as will be seen, the chief paraphrases by Pope and Byron of passages from the Ars Poetica, as contained respectively in the Essay on Criticism and the Hints from Horace. They are not only various renderings, but are often interpretative of the text, and serve to illustrate the continuity of Horatian influence in the English verse of the last two centuries. The whole of the Horatian part—text, translation, and notes—has been read in proof by my friend and colleague, Professor Edward P. Morris, and may therefore be assumed to have passed the scrutiny of a much more considerable expert in these matters than I can, in reason, ever hope to become.

For the text of Vida I have had before me four editions: Tristram’s second edition (Oxford, 1723), the London edition of 1732, Pope’s Selecta Poemata Italorum (London, 1740), and Batteux’s Les Quatre Poétiques (Paris, 1771). For the loan of the latter to the Yale Library I am indebted to the Librarian of the Boston Athenæum. These texts are substantially the same, the only important variant that I have noted being in Bk. 2, l. 97, where the first and third mentioned have et, and the others aut. In words like lacryma and simulacrum, the first and third have ch, the others c. Unimportant differences are Tibur, Batteux, Tybur, all the others; caeco, ed. 1723, caeco, all the others, etc. The translation has been taken from Scott’s edition of Dryden, Vol. xv. pp. 230-265, one or two obvious errors having been corrected. The notes are drawn from no one source, though much assistance has been derived from the edition of 1723.

About the text of Boileau there is virtually no question. Chalmers’ English Poets has furnished the translation. The chief single source of information for the notes was found in the Amsterdam edition of 1718.
PREFACE.

The punctuation of texts and translations has been freely changed in the interest of perspicuity, and the orthography of the English versions has been brought to a common and modern standard.

In conclusion, I venture to hope that the present compilation may do something to promote a sounder knowledge of poetic processes and theory, as much by incitement to independent thought as by the imposition of authoritative canons. Nay, unless it incite to independent thought, how can any canon impose itself on a free and active intelligence?

Yale University,
July 4, 1892.

ALBERT S. COOK.
CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION ........................................... xi

ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS ................................... xix
   Horace ........................................ xix
   Vida .......................................... xxix
   Boileau ........................................ xxxvii
   The Translations and Translators ....................... liv

HORACE’S ART OF POETRY .................................. 1

VIDA’S ART OF POETRY ................................... 39
   Book I ......................................... 39
   Book II ....................................... 77
   Book III ....................................... 118

BOILEAU’S ART OF POETRY ................................ 159
   Canto I ........................................ 159
   Canto II .................................... 173
   Canto III ..................................... 185
   Canto IV ..................................... 209

NOTES .................................................. 225
   Horace ........................................ 225
   Vida .......................................... 252
   Boileau ....................................... 268

INDEX .................................................... 293
INTRODUCTION.

There can be no doubt that after Roman authors had been schooled by Grecian art, they forfeited in large measure so much of instinctive sublimity as was theirs by birthright. Had it ever been at their command — and such writers as Lucretius, nay, even Catullus, show that the assumption is not an idle one — the ‘large utterance of the early gods’ was gone with the coming of the foreign Olympians and of all that the latter represented. Henceforth, save for the frigid mouthings of imperfectly naturalized Spaniards, the ideal of the poet was grace, moderation, fine workmanship.

But not only did the Romans lose with their political and literary independence a large share of their ancient earnestness and fervor, but they failed to acquire some of the most important qualities in which their Greek masters excelled. It would be too much to say that they were cheated, or that they cheated themselves, in their appropriation of Hellenic spoils, but it cannot be gainsaid that, in their quest for beauty, proportion, and delicacy in style and composition, they omitted certain of the weightier matters which they might have found in their models, the simplicity, rapidity, and sustained nobleness of the Greek epic, the opulence, elevation, strength, and swiftness of the Greek triumphant ode.

In a certain sense, then, the Hellenic discipline made the Romans un-Hellenic. Nor is the explanation far to seek. The imitable and compassable qualities of a work of art are always matters of detail, rarely or never the vital and animating principle. Hence, where grandeur is present in a composition, it springs directly from the soul of the artist. Taking thought will add no cubit to the moral stature of the thinker, and just as little to that of his literary product. The labor of the file confers no majesty, and indeed we have seen works, like those of Michael Angelo in the Chapel of the Medici, in which the sublimest ideality is attained by incompleteness. Self-restraint may be the condition of irreproachable beauty, but a certain splendid audacity is essential to the expression of sublimity. This view is abundantly confirmed by the writers of the Augustan age of Rome. Where is Virgil most impressive? Is it not in passages where the lines are dictated by a proud patriotism, passages which fling a scornful defiance at the elder civilization? Is it not where he reverts to the ancient Roman strain, and falls back upon that which was primitive and fundamental in the Roman nature, the consciousness of imperial function and destiny?
INTRODUCTION.

Excudent alii spirantia mollius aera,
Credo equidem, vivos ducent de marmore vultus,
Orabunt causas melius, caelique meatus
Describent radio et surgentia sidera dicent:
Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento;
Hae tibi erunt artes — pacisque inponere morem,
Parcere subjectis, et debellare superbos.

Horace was most assiduous in polishing his compositions, and recommends, as his Art of Poetry teaches us, a similar labor to others, but he was well aware that industry is no substitute for native endowment, and confesses as much in the Second Ode of the Fourth Book, where he compares himself with Pindar.

He who to Pindar's height attempts to rise,
Like Icarus, with waxen pinions tries
His pathless way, and from the venturous theme
Falling shall leave to azure seas his name.
INTRODUCTION.

As when a river, swollen by sudden showers,
O'er its known banks from some steep mountain pours,
So in profound, unmeasurable song
The deep-mouthed Pindar, foaming, pours along.

Well he deserves Apollo's laureled crown,
Whether new words he rolls enraptured down
Impetuous through the dithyrambic strains,
Free from all laws but what himself ordains;

Whether in lofty tone sublime he sings
The immortal gods or god-descended kings
With death deserved who smote the Centaurs dire,
And quenched the fierce Chimaera's breath of fire.

* * * * * *

But, like a bee, which through the breezy groves
With feeble wing and idle murmurs roves,

Sits on the bloom, and with unceasing toil
From thyme sweet-breathing culls his flowery spoil,
So I — weak bard! — round Tiber's lucid spring,
Of humbler strain laborious verses sing.

And where in Horace shall we meet with the passion that breathes in Sappho's immortal ode?

Speechless I gaze. The flame within
Runs swift o'er all my quivering skin;
My eyeballs swim; with dizzy din
My brain reels round;
And cold drops fall; and tremblings frail
Seize every limb; and grassy pale
I grow; and then — together fail
Both sight and sound.

Where, in any Latin poet, shall we listen to the ethereal rapture, the melodious intoxication, of the Chorus of Aristophanes in the Birds?
INTRODUCTION.

Cease, my mate, from slumber now;
Let the sacred hymn-notes flow,
Wailing with thy voice divine,
Long-wept Itys, mine and thine.
So, when thy brown beak is thrilling
With that holy music-trilling,
Through the woodbine's leafy bound
Swells the pure melodious sound
To the throne of Zeus; and there
Phæbus of the golden hair
Hearing, to thine elegies
With awakened chords replies
On his ivory-claspèd lyre,
Stirring all the Olympian quire;
Till from each immortal tongue
Of that blessèd heavenly throng
Peals the full harmonious song.

What the Augustan poets learned from the Greeks, then, was so much of literary art as can be taught — as can be taught to an alien race, endowed by nature with gifts at once greater than and inferior to those of their teachers. The virile force which conquered the world they could learn to subdue in expression, to manipulate as the energies of steam are manipulated through the complexities of cunning machinery, to expend upon the carving of the cherry-stones of verse, or even upon the construction and elaboration of an epic like the Æneid. Horace is the schoolmaster of this doctrine, and there can be no question that, in assuming this function, he rendered an essential service to his people, and to the races whom they, in their turn, were to instruct in civility. The elements of poetic criticism, the higher mechanics of verse, the necessity of unity, of proportion, of fidelity to the obvious and unmistakable traits of nature — meaning by that human nature — this is the substance of Horace’s teaching. The Latin formulas of artistic verse-making were, if not fully wrought out, at least sketched or suggested in this somewhat rambling epistle which, from the time of Quintilian, some three-quarters of a century later, has borne the title of the Art of Poetry.
INTRODUCTION.

Horace's little treatise is full of 'winged words.' Many phrases and single lines, illustrating his 'callida junctura,' or remarkable as the adequate and almost inevitable expression of an enduring thought, linger in the memory. Who does not know these proverbial catchwords, such as 'purpureus pannus,' 'jus et norma loquendi,' 'decies repetita placebit'? They are as nails fastened by a master of assemblies, meant to stay where they were fixed, and fulfilling in this sense the purpose of their author.

The Revival of Learning is often thought of as a return to the Greek. Yet it was, in its main current and tendency, rather a renewal of interest in the Latin as literature. Upon this point the testimony of Mark Pattison ('Isaac Casaubon,' pp. 507, 510, 523) will be regarded as weighty: "In the fifteenth century, 'educated Europe' is but a synonym for Italy. What literature there was outside the Alps was a derivative from, or dependent of, the Italian movement. The fact that the movement originated in the Latin peninsula was decisive of the character of the first age of classical learning (1400-1550). It was a revival of Latin, as opposed to Greek literature. It is now well understood that the fall of Constantinople, though an influential incident of the movement, ranks for nothing among the causes of the Renaissance. What was revived in Italy of the fifteenth century was the taste of the schools of the early Empire—of the second and third century. . . . As Italy had been the home of classical taste in the first period, France became the home of classical learning in the second. . . . It needed two centuries more of speculative effort in Europe, before philologists could go back to Greek philosophy with the key of it in their hands. It is only indeed within the present century that learning has grown strong enough to cope with the exposition of Aristotle, and an edition of the Aristotelian encyclopædia is still a vision of the future.”

By the middle of the sixteenth century the French were imitating the Art of Poetry, and more than a quarter of a century earlier Vida was adapting Quintilian and extracting rules from the practice of Virgil, that Italy might not go astray in the composition of its epics, whether Latin or Italian. Aristotle was not wholly ignored, but neither was he well understood by those whom the nations recognized as the supreme arbiters of taste. The ‘Augustan’ ages of Italy, France, and, we may add, England, were Roman in sentiment and aspiration. Exceptions seem only to prove the rule. Ronsard imitated Pindar and Anacreon, but Malherbe quickly blighted his fame, and restrained the too impetuous soariings of the Gallic Muse. Not till the French Romantic school of the first half of our century threw off the shackles of the Latin tradition was Ronsard rehabilitated in public esteem. Shakespeare, at his best a Greek in limpidity and pregnancy of utterance, was too bold and irregular for Pope and Addison. The Greek genius had breathed, like Spring, for a few lovely days over Western Europe, and the thickets were becoming alive with jubilant voices, when all too quickly matron Summer, in the person of the world-weary literature of the Empire, swept majestically up, struck drought to the heart of the year, hushed the wild warblings, and diffused a uniform sobriety and serenity over meadow and woodland. Pegasus was put into harness, and set to drawing vulgar loads. In simple prose, poetry was forced to become pedestrian, regular, methodical.

It would be an error to regard this restraint and sobriety as an unmixed evil. The northern nations had become habituated to the sway of Roman Christianity, and were not yet prepared for the more primitive and elementary forms of their faith. No more, when just emergent from the Middle Ages and the mediæval conceptions of literature, were they fully ripe for the appropriation of the purer Greek beauty. Their sublimity was but too apt to become rhapsody, their wit to become conceit, and their simplicity a merely puerile naïveté. The Roman discipline was a schoolmaster to bring them to Hellenic freedom and fulness. Thus considered, we see its significance and utility, and can only be thankful that it was, and was vigorously exercised.

But these treatises are more than historic documents, testifying to a state of things which has passed away. In that aspect they are indispensable, as disclosing the principles which, with varying authority in different countries, have held sway from Tasso to Leopardi, from Malherbe to Victor Hugo, and, happily for us—if we except sporadic phenomena, like Ben Jonson in the early seventeenth century—from Pope only to Burns. They are more than historic documents, because successive periods of literature overlap one another, and a poet of Horatian moods may occasionally be caught singing in the nineteenth century, nay—who knows?—perhaps even in America. They are more, because some part of their spirit and meaning is Greek, and therefore less transitory and provisional than that which boasts the eternity of Rome. Finally, they are more, because some part of their content is perennially true, irrespective of its local or temporal origin, because their form is imperishable, and therefore because men will continue to peruse and discuss them so long as poetry is honored.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

1. HORACE.

[Batteux, Les Quatres Poëtiques, i. 1–3.]

Of all the ancient poets there is none who is more read than Horace, and of all the poems of Horace there is none which better deserves to be read and pondered with care than his Art of Poetry. It is the code of reason for all the arts in general; it is good taste reduced to principles.

Notwithstanding, the poet did not intend to give us in this work a complete treatise on poetry. We must not suffer ourselves to be misled. It is an epistle that he addressed to Lucius Piso, a man of taste, one of the first men in Rome, and to his two sons, the elder of whom was a man grown, perfectly capable of doing his own thinking and of directing himself. It was accordingly not a time to dwell upon details, reason on the nature of poetry, distinguish its genera and species, examine the mode of constructing plots or poetic actions, etc. Piso and his sons did not need the instructions of Horace upon all these points, which were everywhere explained, by all the masters, in all the treatises on poetry, Greek and others, of which there were then no lack. What was expected from Horace was acute opinions, but not more acute than profound, select rules, the observations of a genius, the judgments of a master,—in a word what the most cultivated talent of the most cultivated century of Rome would teach if he should condescend to give instruction, and what the ablest masters, and even the best books, did not teach.

In the Ars Poetica Horace assumes the office of a literary critic more formally than either in the Epistle to Augustus or in that to Florus. The epistolary has developed into the didactic form; or rather there is a kind of compromise between them. Three-fifths of the poem are almost purely didactic; the style in that part of the poem is more compact, sententious, and impersonal, than in any of the other Epistles; the irony and the conversational manner of his other Epistles are alike absent. This purely didactic part seems to be a résumé of Greek criticism on the drama, ultimately, perhaps, based on the doctrines of Aristotle, but, according to Porphyrian, really made up of selections from an Alexandrian critic, Neoptolemus of Parium. It contains general precepts applicable to all artistic creation, particularly to poetry as representative of action; and many technical directions, specially applicable to tragedy, are given. Attention is also drawn to the style suitable to the satyric drama. Though much of the illustration of this part of the poem is probably due to Horace himself, yet in the general principles which he lays down he seems to be a mere exponent of the canons of Greek criticism. How far, besides being an exponent, he is also a translator, can only be conjectured, but certain phrases, such as ‘dominantia nomina,’ and ‘communia’ in the phrase ‘difficile est proprie communia dicere,’ look like translations; and the arrangement of the materials suggests the notion of a composition based on selections from a continuous work, rather than of an organic whole growing out of a definite conception of his subject and a definite plan of exposition. Perhaps we should not be wrong in referring the general principles applicable to all poetry, such as those on the paramount importance of the choice and conception of the subject, and on the dependence of the method of treatment on that conception —
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Cui lecta potenter erit res,
Nec facundia deseret hunc, nec lucidus ordo —

as well as the technical precepts on the functions of the chorus, the division of the play into five acts, etc., to the Greek original; while the directions as to expression, where he reverts again to the old controversy on the relative merits of the new and old poets, may be regarded as Horace's own contribution to criticism, based on his own practice and that of the best of his contemporaries. In any case we have in the first part of the poem not indeed a methodical treatise on the art of poetry, nor a perfectly planned and articulated didactic poem, but a series of sound principles on the conception of a dramatic action, the evolution of a plot, the consistent presentation of character, propriety and variety of style, regularity and variety of metrical effect, which might serve as a guide to those who were endeavoring to substitute for the old tragedy of Ennius and Accius a more legitimate drama, not servilely following, but more nearly conforming to, the great models of the Attic stage. If the Roman drama was to rise to as high a degree of perfection as Roman epic and lyric poetry had attained in the Augustan age — and to enable it to attain that degree of perfection is the motive of the poem — it could only do so on the same conditions as those on which epic and lyric poetry had been perfected, by a thorough comprehension of and rigorous adherence to the methods of the Greek masters. In the Epistle to Augustus, Horace, while seeming to despair of a revival of the acted drama on the Roman stage, and while disclaiming for himself all thought of dramatic writing, yet assigns the very highest place in literature to the successful dramatist —
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Ille per extentum funem mihi posse videtur
Ire poeta, meum qui pectus inaniter angit,
Irritat, mulctet, falsis terroribus implet,
Ut magus, et modo me Thebis, modo ponit Athenis.

The occasion of the young Piso following or aspiring to follow the fashion set by Pollio and Varrius, prompts Horace to embody in a treatise written primarily for his guidance the results of his reading and of his own reflection on dramatic criticism; and he proceeds in the remainder of the poem more in his own familiar, sometimes ironical style, to offer advice which seems as much intended to dissuade him from as to encourage him in his task. He glides almost insensibly from the earlier to the latter part of his subject. Starting from a reference to the careless workmanship of Roman poets in their use of Greek metres, and the careless criticism of their audiences, he proceeds to show in his own language and from his own observation what goes to the making of a poet, and what constitutes good and bad taste —

Unde parentur opes, quid alat formetque poetam,
Quid deceat, quid non, quo virtus quo ferat error.

It is in keeping with all the serious convictions of his later years that he bases all good writing on a true criticism of life in its ethical relations —

Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons —

and that he ranks first in these relations the duties of patriotism and friendship —

Qui didicit patriæ quid debeat et quid amicis.

The poet’s aim should be to combine pleasure with instruction. A few minor faults may be excused in a long poem, yet poetry is the one accomplishment in which mediocrity is intolerable. You are not called upon to be a poet, he says to Piso, and you have too much sense to undertake anything against the grain of your natural capacity —

Tu nihil invita dices faciesve Minerva.

Yet if you do write, submit your work to experienced critics, and 'keep it back for nine years' before publishing it. Poetry in days of old was purely a divine gift. It was by 'the sacred poet, the revealer of the will of the Gods,' that the elements of civilization were introduced —

Sie honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque
Carminibus venit.

Next Homer and Tyrtaeus roused men by their verse to battles; then oracles were uttered in verse; finally lyrical poetry and the drama came as the solace of men resting from their labors. Genius, the divine gift, is thus the first condition of poetic success; but mere genius, without art, is ineffective — ego nec studium sine divite vena,

Nec rude quid possit video ingenium.

Yet though success in every other accomplishment is sought by discipline, labor, and self-denial, men appear to think that they can write without taking any trouble. If any one read his poems to Quintilius, he frankly pointed out the faults, and urged correction of them. If the author defended his faults, he left him in his self-satisfaction and took no more interest in him. An honest critic will put a mark against lines that are lifeless, harsh, unpolished or obscure, and will insist on the pruning of all unnecessary ornament. He will become an Aristarchus, and will not fear giving offense to his friend. Sensible men do not like to have anything to do with poets who cannot submit to criticism. They let them go their own course and come to grief in their own way. The bad poet scares away the educated and uneducated alike by his persecution. If he does secure a listener, he sticks to him like a leech and bores him to death by his recitations —

tenet occiditque legendo
Non missura cutem, nisi plena cruoris, hirudo.

The work as a whole is hardly to be judged either as a systematic didactic poem, or as a familiar epistle. The one form imperceptibly passes into the other. It has sometimes been supposed that the work was left unfinished and published posthumously. There is no evidence to establish this conclusion. In point of execution the work is as finished as any in Latin literature. It is the maturest specimen of that style which Horace uses in serious discussion and exposition, but more compact and sententious than in the other literary Epistles. The doctrines themselves and their expression bear the mark of having been long weighed and considered. The expression of them has an authoritative, almost oracular character. The difficulty in tracing a connected line of argument or one definite aim in the poem may be attributed rather to his love of conciseness, and his preference of a familiar to a more formal style of exposition, than to any want of completeness in working out his plan. Horace was not a systematic reasoner like Lucretius. It was a principle of art with him to avoid or make the most sparing use of those formulæ, so largely used by Lucretius and after him by Virgil, by which the transitions from one line of thought to another are clearly marked. He may have begun the poem with the intention of writing a systematic didactic poem on tragedy. For this he found an example in the old national literature — the Didascalica of Accius — and for some of his materials and method he may have had recourse to an Alexandrian model, as Virgil had to more than one in the composition of his didactic poem. But before completing more than half his task he falls back, without ceasing to be didactic, into the more familiar attitude of one offering friendly advice, not based on books but on his own experience, to a particular person in whom he is interested. He knows perfectly well that genius and insight cannot be communicated by instruction. What can be done is to impress the necessity of avoiding the besetting sin of Roman authors, careless composition, and contentment with a low standard of good writing. This he had already urged in the Satires and in the Epistle to Augustus. Perfection of workmanship is what he inculcates by precept and example. If a man has neither genius nor taste, there is no call on him to write and become one of the nuisances of society. It is not so much by conformity to technical rules — though they have a negative value in the way of restraining extravagant conception and execution — as by having a high standard of accomplishment and sparing no pains to attain it, that the Roman drama may be raised to as high a pitch of perfection as other branches of literature. Genius is the indispensable condition of success; but genius is ineffective without culture, especially ethical culture, and without discipline, especially discipline in correcting errors, pruning redundancies, and remedying defects of style.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

[LONSDALE AND LEE, Works of Horace, pp. 203–205.]

But this is certain, that with little apparent effort, and little trouble, except, no doubt, the careful correction of particular expressions, Horace has given us an immortal treatise. Truly has Keightley called it the Art of Criticism, rather than the Art of Poetry. The same may be said of Boileau's Art of Poetry. Pope has properly named his treatise an Essay on Criticism. Walckenaer says that Vida's Poetics have received the praises of Scaliger, that they are written in a florid and elegant style, and in verses that imitate the Virgilian rhythm, but that they are weak and diffuse, and violate the Horatian maxim, 'In all your precepts remember to be brief.' This fault of diffuseness cannot justly be found either with Boileau or Pope. Both these writers are clear, correct, terse, and to the point. They are elegant, but do not sacrifice other qualities to elegance. They both have a large share of the sense and judgment of the Latin writer. They are not without his liveliness; at any rate, the English poet is not. While Horace owes little or nothing to Aristotle's Poetics, the two modern authors owe very much to Horace, and Boileau in particular is a close imitator. As Pope says of him, 'He still in right of Horace sways.' Indeed, parts of his Art are almost translations of Horace, and happy ones too. Boileau, like Horace, does not deny that genius is necessary for a poet, but dwells much on the importance of art. He is the strong advocate of common sense, and of the avoidance of all extremes. He is quite the writer of the Augustan age of France, and has a relation to Louis XIV. not altogether unlike that of Horace to Augustus. He has the same distaste for pompous pretensions in poetry. He warns poets against flatterers as strongly as Horace does. He also speaks of the various kinds of poetry, and their difference. He follows his master closely and happily in his description of the characteristics of the ages of men. For all that, curiously enough, he gives only four lines to the express mention of Horace, to whom he owes so much, lines too without any particular point in them. Voltaire, who styles the Satires of Boileau the failure of his youth, speaks of his Epistles as fine, and of his Art of Poetry as admirable. The praise is deserved, and comes from one who on such a subject as the Epistles of Horace is a good judge, though on many other subjects, as on the Bible, Shakespeare, and Calderon, a very bad one. Still, though Boileau, like Horace, is clear, neat, sensible, correct, though to both writers may be applied the line:
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Si j'écris quatre mots, j'en effacerai trois, yet is he wonderfully inferior to the Roman poet, and leaves, at least on an Englishman, the impression of weariness, caused no doubt in part by the want of variety in his style, and by a lack of vigor and spirit.

Most that may be said of Boileau's production is applicable to Pope's Essay on Criticism, a treatise composed in the same style and manner. Pope is the writer of the Augustan age of England. In order and regularity and the completeness of his plan, Pope is superior to Horace; some of his lines are models of neatness of expression; specially, in his illustration of the manner in which the sound should be an echo to the sense, he has written some of the most perfect lines in any poetry;¹ he feels, and admirably expresses his feeling, that to make a good critic the heart should be right as well as the head; and that pride, prejudice, and envy are almost as great a hindrance to a true judgment in literature, as dulness and ignorance. And yet even Pope's Essay on Criticism, with all its merits, is wanting in the variety, the life, the playfulness, the graceful negligence, the happy ease, of the inimitable Latin author.

Lord Byron's Hints from Horace is an adaptation of the Art of Poetry in the manner of Pope; or, as he himself curiously expresses it, An Allusion in English Verse to the Epistle Ad Pisones de Arte Poetica. The work is a complete failure, though written by a great poet; it is for the most part commonplace and dull; it wants the ease and delicacy of Horace, Pope's epigrammatic felicity of phrase and command of antithesis, and the concise and studied carefulness of workmanship common to both the earlier poets. For the poetical genius of Byron, though more powerful and splendid than that of Horace or Pope, is yet deficient in their peculiar excellencies: and perhaps the consciousness of this deficiency was in a great measure the cause of that extravagant admiration of Pope which Byron felt throughout his life. It is remarkable that Byron himself preferred the Hints from Horace to the first two cantos of Childe Harold, which he had written about the same time; and after an interval of nine years, during which he had written most of those works which have given him his fame, he says, alluding to these Hints, 'I wrote better then than now.' This preference for their inferior writings has been not uncommon with poets; so Milton preferred his Paradise Regained to Paradise Lost, and Petrarch his Latin Poems to his Sonnets. Notwithstanding his veneration of Pope, Byron seems to have had little sympathy with Horace, any more than with Virgil. In the latter poet he can only see 'that harmonious plagiary and miserable flatterer,' and of the former he speaks as 'Horace, whom I hated so'; and he goes on to speak of 'the curse' that it is,

¹ But in this he was anticipated by Vida.—Ed.

To comprehend, but never love thy verse.

Yet in the same passage he well describes the characteristic of Horace's style of satire (in words somewhat similar to those of Persius), as

Awakening without wounding the touched heart.

Horace was a Greek scholar, an admirer of Greek literature, and yet we cannot account him as one able to enter into the spirit of such writers as Æschylus or Sophocles. His rules about poetry are not applicable to all classical, still less are they prospectively to modern, poetry, except to a certain part of it.

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven.

With such a poet as that, Horace's criticisms have no relation. And even the artificial style of poetry owes but little to criticism. Racine would not learn much from the sensible advice of Boileau.¹ Genius inspires the poet, not merely with noble thoughts, but with untaught shapes, the forms in which suitably to clothe these thoughts. The good that criticism can do is negative rather than positive. It is something to deter those who have no genius for writing poetry from trying to be poets, and to warn such that heaven and earth and booksellers alike condemn mediocrity in poetry. And if good poets are rare, so are good critics. Compositions such as those of Boileau and Pope, in which sense, wit, terseness of expression are found, give pleasure. And Horace's Art of Poetry is full of information on subjects long past, is not unworthy of the author of the Satires and Epistles, is full of kindly wit and lively wisdom, and has furnished succeeding ages with many a quotation applied to subjects quite different from that on which the line was originally written.

¹ Sainte-Beuve thinks otherwise on this point. — Ed.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

2. VIDA.

[POPE, Essay on Criticism, 697-708.]

But see! each Muse, in Leo's golden days,
Starts from her trance and trims her withered bays;
Rome's ancient Genius, o'er its ruins spread,
Shakes off the dust and rears his reverend head.
Then Sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leaped to form, and rocks began to live;
With sweeter notes each rising temple rung;
A Raphael painted and a Vida sung —
Immortal Vida, on whose honored brow
The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow;
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame!

[DRYDEN, Discourse on Satire.]

But in an epic poet, one who is worthy of that name, besides an universal genius is required universal learning, together with all those qualities and acquisitions which I have named above, and as many more as I have through haste or negligence omitted.
And, after all, he must have exactly studied Homer and Virgil as his patterns, Aristotle and Horace as his guides, and Vida and Bossu as their commentators, with many others (both Italian and French critics) which I want leisure here to recommend.

[Roscoe, Life of Leo the Tenth, 2. 154-157.]

Marco Girolamo Vida was a native of Cremona. Some diversity of opinion has arisen as to the time of his birth, which event has generally been placed about the year 1470, whilst some have contended that it could not have occurred until the year 1490. The reasons adduced by different authors have served to refute the opinions of their opponents, without establishing their own; and as Vida was, as it will hereafter appear, certainly born some years after the first-mentioned time, and some years before the latter, his nativity may be placed with sufficient accuracy about the middle of these two very distant periods. His family was of respectable rank, and, although his parents were not wealthy, they were enabled to bestow upon their son a good education, for which purpose he was successively sent to several of the learned academies with which Italy was then so well provided. The first specimen of the talents of Vida in Latin poetry appeared in a collection of pieces on the death of the poet Serafino d'Aquila, which happened in the year 1500; towards which he contributed two pieces, which were published in that collection at Bologna, in the year 1504. In this publication he is named by his baptismal appellation, Marc Antonio, which, on his entering into regular orders, he changed to that of Marco Girolamo. The memorable combat between thirteen French and thirteen Italian soldiers, under the walls of Barletta, in the year 1503, afforded him a subject for a more extensive work; the loss of which is to be regretted, not only as the early production of so elegant a writer, but as a curious historical document. After having made a considerable proficiency in the more serious studies of philosophy, theology, and political science, he repaired to Rome, where he arrived in the latter part of the pontificate of Julius II., and appears to have been a constant attendant on those literary meetings which were then held in that city, and were continued in the commencement of the pontificate of Leo X. Of his larger works, on which his reputation as a Latin poet is at this day founded, his three books De Arte Poetica were probably the first produced, and these were soon afterwards followed by his poem on the growth of silkworms, entitled Bombyx, and by his Scacchiæ Ludus, a poem on the game of chess. On the last of these poems being shown to Leo X., he was delighted beyond measure with the novelty of the subject, and with the dignity, ease, and lucid arrangement with which it was treated, which appeared to him almost beyond the reach of human powers. He therefore requested to see the author, who was accordingly introduced to him by Giammatteo Ghiberti, bishop of Verona, who appears to have been his earliest patron, and whom he has celebrated in terms of the warmest affection in several of his works. Vida was received by the pontiff with particular distinction and kindness, admitted as an attendant on the court, and rewarded with honors and emoluments; but that upon which the poet appears chiefly to have congratulated himself was that his works were read and approved by the pontiff himself. Whether Leo was merely desirous of engaging Vida in a subject that might call forth all his talents, or whether he wished to raise up a rival to Sannazaro, who, he probably suspected, was not favorable to his fame, certain it is that at his suggestion Vida began his Christiad, which he afterwards completed in six books, but which the pontiff was prevented, by his untimely death, from seeing brought to a termination. The future patronage of this work was therefore reserved for Clement VII., under whose auspices it was first published in the year 1535, with an apolo-getical advertisement at the close of the work, in which the author excuses the boldness of his attempt by informing the reader that he was induced to begin and to persevere in his undertaking by the solicitations and munificence of the two pontiffs, Leo X. and Clement VII., to whose exertions and liberality he ascribes the revival of literature from its long state of torpor and degradation.

In order to stimulate the poet to terminate this work, or to reward him for the progress he had made in it, Clement had already raised him to the rank of apostolical secretary, and in the year 1532 conferred on him the bishopric of Alba. Soon after the death of that pontiff Vida retired to his diocese, and was present at its defense against the attack of the French in the year 1542, where his exhortations and example animated the inhabitants successfully to oppose the enemy. After having attended in his episcopal character at the council of Trent, and taken an active part in the ecclesiastical and political transactions of the times, he died at his see of Alba, on the twenty-seventh day of September, 1566, more respected for his talents, integrity, and strict attention to his pastoral duties than for the wealth which he had amassed from his preferments.

Of all the writers of Latin poetry at this period, Vida has been the most generally known beyond the limits of Italy. This is to be attributed, not only to the fortunate choice of his subjects, but to his admirable talent of uniting a considerable portion of elegance, and often of dignity, with the utmost facility and clearness of style, insomuch that the most complex descriptions or abstruse illustrations are rendered by him perfectly easy and familiar to the reader. Of his Virgilian eclogues, the third and last is devoted to commemorate the sorrows of Vittoria Colonna, on the death of her beloved husband, the Marquis of Pescara. Among his smaller poems, his verses to the memory of his parents, who both died about the same time, and while he was engaged in the successful pursuit of preferment at
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Rome, display true pathos and beautiful images of filial affection.

The Poetics of Vida, to which he is indebted for so considerable a part of his reputation both as a poet and as a critic, were, on their publication in 1527, addressed by the author to the dauphin Francis, son of Francis I., at that time a prisoner with his brother Henry, as an hostage for his father at the court of Spain; but this address was not prefixed until several years after the termination of the work itself, which was written at Rome under the pontificate of Leo X., and originally inscribed to Angelo Dovizio, nephew of the cardinal Bernardo da Bibbiena, who afterwards attained also the honor of the purple. It has indeed been supposed that this production was first printed at Cremona, in the year 1520, and it is certain that the fellow-citizens of Vida had requested his permission to make use of this work for the instruction of youth, to which he expressed his assent in a letter which yet remains; but although it appears from the archives of Cremona that it was actually ordered to be printed, yet there is reason to suppose that this order was not carried into effect, not a single copy of such an edition having hitherto occurred to the notice of any bibliographer. The cause of this is perhaps to be attributed to Vida himself, who had in his letter given strict injunctions that his work should not be made public, and whose subsequent remonstrances, when he was acquainted with the intentions of the magistrates of Cremona, may be supposed to have deterred them from committing his work to the press. The approbation which the Poetics of Vida had the good fortune to obtain from the most correct and elegant poet of our own country has recommended them to general notice; to which it may be added that an excellent English critic [Warton] considers them as the most perfect of all the compositions of their author and as 'one of the first, if not the very first piece of criticism that appeared in Italy since the revival of learning.'
In his poem of the Christiad Vida has avoided the error into which Sannazaro has fallen in mingling the profane fables of the heathen mythology with the mysteries of the Christian religion, and, like Milton, seeks for inspiration only from the great fountain of life and truth. Although he placed Virgil before him as his principal model, and certainly regarded him with sentiments next to adoration, as may appear from the conclusion of the third book of his Poetics, yet he knew how to fix the limits of his imitation; and, whilst he availed himself of the style and manner, and sometimes even of the language of the great Mantuan, he sought not to give to his writings a classic air by the introduction of such persons and imagery as could only violate probability, nature, and truth. Hence, whilst the poem of Sannazaro seems to be the production of an idolater who believes not in the truths which he affects to inculcate, and frequently verges on the confines of indecency or incongruity, the writings of Vida display a sincere and fervent piety, a contempt of meretricious ornament, and an energetic simplicity of language, which will secure to them unmingled and lasting approbation.

[Symonds, Renaissance in Italy, The Revival of Learning, pp. 471–476.]

Vida won his first laurels in the field of didactic poetry. Virgilian exercises on the breeding of silkworms and the game of chess displayed his faculty for investing familiar subjects with the graces of a polished style. Such poems, whether written in Latin, or, like the Api of Rucellai, in Italian, gratified the taste of the Renaissance, always appreciative of form independent of the matter it invested. For a modern student Vida’s metrical treatise in three books on the Art of Poetry has greater interest, since it illustrates the final outcome of classic studies in the age of Leo. The Poetica is addressed to Francis,
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Dauphin of France, in his Spanish prison. . . . After this dedication Vida describes the solace to be found in poetry, and adds some precepts on the preparation of the student's mind. A rapid review of the history of poetry — the decline of Greek inspiration after Homer, and of Latin after Virgil; the qualities of the Silver Age, and the revival of letters under the Medici at Florence — serves to show how narrow the standard of Italian culture had become between the period of Poliziano, who embraced so much in his sketch of Literature, and that of Vida, who confined himself to so little. The criticism is not unjust; but it proves that the refinement of taste by scholarship had resulted in restricting students to one or two models, whom they followed with servility. Having thus established his general view of the poetic art, Vida proceeds to sketch a plan of education. The qualities and duties of a tutor are described; and here we may notice how far Vittorino's and Guarino's methods had created an ideal of training for Italy. The preceptor must above all things avoid violence, and aim at winning the affections of his pupil; it would be well for him to associate several youths in the same course of study, so as to arouse their emulation. He must not neglect their games, and must always be careful to suit his methods to the different talents of his charges. When the special studies to be followed are discussed, Vida points out that Cicero is the best school of Latin style. He recommends the early practice of bucolic verse, and inculcates the necessity of treating youthful essays with indulgence. These topics are touched with more or less felicity of phrase and illustration; and though the subject-matter is sufficiently trite, the good sense and kindly feeling of the writer win respect. The first book concludes with a peroration on the dignity and sanctity of poets, a theme the humanists were never weary of embroidering. The second describes the qualities of a good poem, as these were conceived by the refined but formal taste of the sixteenth century. It should begin quietly, and manage to excite without satisfying the curiosity of the reader. Vain displays of learning are to be avoided. Episodes and similes must occur at proper intervals; and a frugal seasoning of humor will be found agreeable. All repetitions should be shunned, and great care should be taken to vary the narrative with picturesque descriptions. Rhetoric, again, is not unworthy of attention, when the poet seeks to place convenient and specious arguments in the mouths of his personages.

It is difficult in a summary to do justice to this portion of Vida's poem. His description of the ideal epic is indeed nothing more or less than a refined analysis of the Æneid; and students desirous of learning what the Italians of the sixteenth century admired in Virgil, will do well to study its acute and sober criticism. A panegyric of Leo closes the second book. From this peroration some lines upon the woes of Italy may be read with profit, as proving that the nation, conscious of its own decline, was contented to accept the primacy of culture in exchange for independence.

The third book treats of style and diction. To be clear and varied, to command metaphor and allusion, to choose phrases colored by mythology and fancy, to suit the language to the subject, to vary the metrical cadence with the thought and feeling, and to be assiduous in the use of the file are mentioned as indispensable to excellence. A peroration on Virgil, sonorous and impassioned, closes the whole poem, which, rightly understood, is a monument erected to the fame of the Roman bard by the piety of his Italian pupil. The final lines are justly famous.

Vida's own intellect was clear, and his style perspicuous; but his genius was mediocre. His power lay in the disposition of materials and in illustration. A precise taste, formed on Cicero and Virgil, and exercised with judgment in a narrow sphere, satisfied his critical requirements. Virgil with him was first and last, and midst and without end. In a word, he shows what a scholar of sound parts and rhetorical aptitude could achieve by the study and imitation of a single author.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS

3. BOILEAU.

[Pope, Essay on Criticism, 709-722.]

But soon by impious arms from Latium chased,
Their ancient bounds the banished Muses passed;
Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
But critic-learning flourished most in France;
The rules a nation, born to serve, obeys,
And Boileau still in right of Horace sways.
But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despised,
And kept unconquered, and uncivilized;
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defied the Romans, as of old.
Yet some there were, among the sounder few
Of those who less presumed, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restored wit's fundamental laws.

[Sainte-Beuve, Causeries du Lundi, Vol. 6.]

Within the last twenty-five or thirty years the point of view with regard to Boileau has greatly changed. When at the Restoration, that splendid hour of hope and gallant endeavor, new generations arrived, and attempted to renovate literary species and forms, to broaden the circle of literary ideas and comparisons, they experienced resistance on the part of their predecessors. Authors estimable indeed, but lagging behind the age, other writers much less commendable, and who, in the lifetime of Boileau, would have been among the first to receive castigation at his hands, hoisted the banner of this 'lawgiver of Parnassus,' and, without considering the difference in the age, quoted his lines on all occasions like the articles of a code. We did then, we who were young — and I only half repent of our doings — what it was natural to do. We took Boileau's works by themselves; though few in number, they are unequal in vigor; there are those which betray the youth, and others which betray the age of their author. While rendering justice to the sound and beautiful portions, our praise was somewhat faint, and our hearts did not cleave to the spirit of the man. Boileau, as personage and authority, is much more important than his work, and a certain effort is necessary to reconstitute him in his integrity. In a word, we did not then make a full historical study of him, and were half way involved in the controversies of the period.

At this later day, the circle of experimentation having been rounded, and discussion being exhausted, we return to him with pleasure. If I may be permitted to speak of myself, Boileau is one of the men with whom I have been the most occupied since I have been engaged in criticism, and with whom I have most constantly lived in thought. . . . Boileau realized, and made his friends realize, that 'admirable lines do not entitle one to disregard those which are to form their context.' Such, rightly defined, is his literary achievement. . . . Do you know what, in our own time, has been wanting to our poets, so full of natural abilities at their first appearance, so rich in promise and felicitous suggestion? They have needed two things — a Boileau and an enlightened monarch, the one seconding and hallowing the other. For lack of them these men of talent, conscious of living in an age of anarchy and indiscipline, have not been slow to conduct themselves accordingly; in literal terms, they have conducted themselves, not like noble geniuses, nor even like men, but like students off on a vacation. The results we have witnessed.
[MABIE, Short Studies in Literature, pp. 5–7.]

So long as literature was a well defined art in the hands of such critics as Boileau or of Pope, and their schools, it was readily characterized. Certain qualities of form supplied a test easily applied—a kind of folding measure which the most scantily equipped critic could carry about in his pocket. But this portable system of mensuration failed to take the dimensions of a number of notable poets, and among them Shakespeare; and it is quite impossible to leave Shakespeare out of account in any definition of literature. One can imagine with what horror Boileau would have looked over Carlyle—he could hardly have looked through him. Among all the literary specimens arranged with Gallic precision to illustrate the principles which ought to underlie literature, Carlyle would have found no place. Boileau would have ruthlessly excluded him from the neat, precise, and very diminutive Pantheon of which he constituted himself the custodian. And yet it is evident that Carlyle belongs to literature; to some of us he was the first to reveal the real scope of literature.

What would Boileau have done with the Kalevala, the Nibelungen Lied, the Russian popular epics, the Scotch Ballads? These wild, free, spontaneous growths from the soil of common life would have fared badly at the hands of a critic accustomed to the smooth elegance of the Alexandrine verse, to the orderly unfolding of the French drama, to the self-conscious, conventional, and artificial conception of art of which he made himself the mouthpiece; and yet it is clear enough that these artless works of earlier and unknown poets are not only literature, but literature of a very significant and interesting kind. If Boileau had been living at the close of the last century, how sorely his spirit would have been tried by the interest in Hindu literature, then for the first time brought within the knowledge of Europeans! That one should prefer the Sakoontala of Kalidasa to the Bérénice of Racine would have filled him with deep and painful perplexity. Evidently literature means a great deal more to us than it meant to Boileau; it means so much that the task of defining it with scientific accuracy is quite beyond us. We have long ago rid ourselves of the idea that any particular form or set of forms furnishes an unfailing test of the presence or absence of the quality which constitutes literature in a book. The essential thing, so far as form is concerned, is not a reproduction of any accepted model, but the excellence which makes a form expressive of beauty or power.

[MORLEY, First Sketch of English Literature, pp. 667–668.]

Boileau’s influence became supreme upon the publication of his Art of Poetry (L’Art Poétique), in 1673. Its four cantos embodied his main doctrine as the Poet of Good Sense. In idea and execution it was inspired by Horace’s Art of Poetry; but its polished maxims, applied specially to French poetry, are more systematically arranged. The order of its cantos is:—1. General rules, with a short digression on the history of French poetry from Villon to Malherbe. 2. Rules and characteristics of the eclogue, elegy, ode, sonnet, epigram, balade, madrigal, satire, and vaudeville. 3. Rules of tragedy, comedy, and epic. 4. General advice to poets on the use of their powers; choice of a critic; origin, rise, and decline of poetry; praise of Louis XIV. The critical shortcomings of this work, which may be said to have given the law for some years to French and English literature, nearly all proceed from a wholesome but too servile regard for the example of the ancient classic writers. The chief authors of Greece and Rome were to be as much the models of good literature as the Latin language was a standard of right speech. This led, indeed, to a sound contempt of empty trivialities, but it left the critic with faint powers of recognition for a Dante, a Shakespeare, or a
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Milton. Boileau was even hindered by it from perceiving how far Terence was surpassed by his friend Molière. His discipline thus tended obviously to the creation of an artificial taste for forms of correct writing excellent in themselves, but as means of perfect expression better suited to the genius of the French than of the English people. He was a true Frenchman, and English writers erred by imitation even of his excellence, in adopting too readily for a nation Germanic in origin and language forms that harmonized better with the mind and language of a Latin race. But, at the same time, they shared with their neighbors the benefit of assent to the appeal in his Art Poétique on behalf of plain good sense against the faded extravagancies of that period of Italian influence from which life and health had departed:

Évitons ces excès. Laissons à l'Italie
De tous ses faux brillans l'éclatante folie.
Tout doit tendre au Bon Sens.

These lines declare the living spirit of the poem, in which, if we are to see only in one foremost work the altered temper of a generation, it may especially be said that the period of Italian influence ended and French influence became supreme.

We are now, therefore, to find in English literature a rising race of critics who test everything by Latin forms. The English must be, for dignity, as Latin as possible in structure, because so the French had determined. That was obedience to them in the letter, not in the spirit. In origin and structure their language was chiefly Latin; they, therefore, other things being equal, preferred words of Latin origin. In origin and structure our language is Teutonic; and had we really followed their example, we should, other things being equal, have preferred words of Teutonic origin.
[Scott, Life of Dryden, ed. Saintsbury, pp. 440–442.]

About the time of the Restoration, the cultivation of letters was prosecuted in France with some energy. But the genius of that lively nation being more fitted for criticism than poetry, for drawing rules from what others have done, than for writing works which might be themselves standards, they were sooner able to produce an accurate table of laws for those intending to write epic poems and tragedies according to the best Greek and Roman authorities, than to exhibit distinguished specimens of success in either department; just as they are said to possess the best possible rules for building ships of war, although not equally remarkable for their power of fighting them. When criticism becomes a pursuit separate from poetry, those who follow it are apt to forget that the legitimate ends of the art for which they lay down rules are instruction or delight, and that these points being attained, by what road soever, entitles a poet to claim the prize of successful merit. Neither did the learned authors of these disquisitions sufficiently attend to the general disposition of mankind, which cannot be contented even with the happiest imitations of former excellence, but demands novelty as a necessary ingredient for amusement. To insist that every epic poem shall have the plan of the Iliad and Aeneid, and every tragedy be fettered by the rules of Aristotle, resembles the principle of an architect who should build all his houses with the same number of windows and of stories. It happened too, inevitably, that the critics, in the plenipotential authority which they exercised, often assumed as indispensable requisites of the drama or epic of circumstances which, in the great authorities they quoted, were altogether accidental and indifferent. These they erected into laws, and handed down as essentials to be observed by all succeeding poets, although the forms prescribed have often as little to do with the merit and success of the originals from which they are taken, as the shape of the drinking-glass with the flavor of the wine which it contains. 'To these encroachments,' says Fielding, after some observations to the same purpose, 'time and ignorance, the two great supporters of imposture, gave authority; and thus many rules for good writing have been established, which have not the least foundation in truth or nature, and which commonly serve for no other purpose than to curb and restrain genius, in the same manner as it would have restrained the dancing-master, had the many excellent treatises on that art laid it down as an essential rule that every man must dance in chains.' It is probable that the tyranny of the French critics, fashionable as the literature of that country was with Charles and his courtiers, would have extended itself over England at the Restoration, had not a champion so powerful as Dryden placed himself in the gap.

[DEMOGEOT, Histoire de la littérature française, pp. 426–430.]

While Racine and Molière were enriching France with their masterpieces, their friend Boileau Despreaux was teaching the public to understand and admire them. Before his day, taste, lacking fixed standards, had indiscriminately sanctioned the excellent and the mediocre. A multitude of authors without merit blocked up the highway of the great writers. Scudéry was admired side by side with Corneille; false wit, though ridiculed by Molière, was not categorically proscribed and condemned. The public venerated the memory of Voiture, and applauded the conceits of Saint Amand and Chapelain. It had not yet 'left' to Spain and 'to Italy'

The dazzling folly of all their false splendors.

The great Corneille himself is perhaps the most striking example of this blending of the worthless with the excellent, of bad taste with sublimity. In a word, there were models, but no theory. It was the task of Boileau to 'disentangle the confused art' of the seventeenth century, and to assign to each man and to every production its proper place in public esteem. It is his glory to have done this with almost infallible judgment, with unshrinking courage, and, what is more, to have pronounced his decisions in so felicitous a form, and in such perfect language, that we should no more think of recasting than of invalidating them.

The worship of good sense, the supremacy of reason in matters of taste, such is the lasting merit of Boileau's teaching. This is the common feature which links him with the other great men of that age. It is the spirit of Descartes transferred to poetry.

No less do we recognize in his criticism the more transient and accidental characteristics of his epoch. Fond above all things of order and regularity, he disciplines poetry as Louis XIV. does society, establishes a rigorous system of caste in the productions of genius, preaches the nobility of language, and insists upon the etiquette of the hemistich and the right divine of the caesura. His mind is just rather than broad, judicial rather than profound. He likes to see things in their most salient aspect, though it be the narrowest. If he wishes to praise Molière for that justness of language which never sacrifices the idea to its expression, he admiringly asks him 'where he finds his rimes.' If it is a question of difficulty in conceiving a plan, the totality of a work of art, in effecting the mutual subordination of the various parts, in forming a series, a connected chain, whose every link, as Buffon says, shall represent an idea, he exclaims, 'It is a task that kills me by the multitude of transitions, which constitute, in my judgment, the most difficult achievement of poetry.'

We are prepared to believe that in a century ruled exclusively by the spirit of society, and whose poets, as a rule, were insensible to nature, Boileau formed no exception. It might seem at first glance as if this defect would be of small consequence in a satirical poet; nevertheless his criticism suffered the consequences of this limitation. A disciple of the ancients, he recommends a mythology which he does not understand. He mistakenly interprets that pantheism of universal life which is the soul of Greek poetry as a system of abstract allegories. Not much better does he comprehend the poetic grandeur of Catholicism. He rejects the marvelous element in Christianity as at once too sacred and too dull, thus calumniating in one breath both poetry and Christian dogma. Boileau, in common with his contemporaries, had no appreciation of the Middle Ages. He betrays a disdainful ignorance of all our old national poetry, and would be willing to exclaim, with Louis XIV., ‘That's too old-fashioned’; or, better still, ‘Out of my sight with those Chinese monstrosities.’

But we must not censure the critic too severely for this aversion to the age that was passing away. Progress is only to be had at this price. New ideas do not assert themselves save by the negation of the old; aloofness passes into hostility. Descartes scorned the whole of antiquity; this was merely an exaggerated form of the supremacy of reason. So Christianity in its inception had persecuted polytheism, even in the literature which reflected it. It was in the name of the modern spirit that Boileau abjured the whole feudal society, its arts and poetry. More Christian than Catholic, more religious than pietistic, it was through independence that he subjected himself to the discipline of our old masters, the Greeks and the Latins. Authority, indeed, he found there, but an authority freely chosen and freely interpreted.

The poetical career of Boileau may be divided into three periods. In the first, from 1660 to 1668, the young satirist attacked bad poets with all the impetuosity of his age, and strove to the uttermost against the false taste imported from Spain and Italy. It was at this time that he published nine Satires, four of which are exclusively literary, while the others directed against the scribblers a multitude of hits, all the more piquant for being unexpected. 'The Satires belong,' says
Voltaire, 'to the first manner of this great painter, very inferior, it is true, to the second, but very superior to that of all the writers of his time, if we except Racine.' Let us add that the ninth satire, addressed to his 'Esprit,' is equal to the best work that Boileau ever did.

In the second period, from 1669 to 1677, Boileau laid satire aside. He had been overthrowing, and was now concerned to reconstruct. At this time, in 1674, appeared his Art Poétique, in which he formulated and co-ordinated the literary doctrines to which he had just assured a triumph. The same year he published the first four songs of the Lutrin, an ingenious and elegant sally, and a masterpiece of versification worthy of a less trivial subject. Already a milder temper animated the critic, and his raillery was more sprightly. He now wrote the first nine Epistles, of which the third, addressed to Racine, combines in the highest degree all the excellent qualities which assure the glory of the great French satirist.

After this work, Boileau, appointed, in conjunction with Racine, historiographer to the king, interrupted, like his colleague, his poetical labors. During the sixteen years that followed, he contented himself with publishing, in 1681, the last two cantos of the Lutrin. He did not re-enter his career until 1693; but, less fortunate than his illustrious friend, he was then far from discovering a new vein. It is here that the third period of his life begins. He reappeared before the public with the Ode to Namur, a feeble and unfortunate lyrical essay.
He composed three frigid satires, against Women, on Honor, and against Equivocation; finally he composed his last three epistles, one of which, that which closes the collection, and has as its subject the Love of God, no longer offers anything attractive either in inspiration or style. Sage as he was, he lacked that rarest gift of wisdom, the knowledge of when to stop.

Boileau is a tremendous fact in the history of literature. He established the national taste, and was able to isolate and place in relief its most vital, most permanent characteristic, its witty, bantering good sense. He ennobled the ancient French spirit of Villon and Marot by teaching it the elegant language of classical antiquity and all the proprieties of the wittiest of courts. He is the citizen of Paris in the great gallery of Versailles.

These advantages were purchased at some cost. The belief has been too prevalent that Boileau traced the definitive limits of art. There has been too much calling of him 'the lawgiver of Parnassus.' Rather was he the teacher of his century; and, in his century itself, he taught the writers less than the public. Without doubt his conversations must have been precious to his illustrious friends, in whom he instilled discontent with themselves and whom he taught to 'rime with pains'; but his writings are especially designed to train the reader, and they are perfectly adapted to that object. His criticism is clean cut, simple, intelligible to all, more negative than inspiring; it reduces the principles of art to those of common sense. It is piquant, bantering, calumnious, wholly free from technical terms. Finally, it casts its precepts into imperishable verse, as resplendent with metaphors as with reason; it coins them into proverbs, and stamps them, whether we will or no, upon the memory.

There are greater names in our literary history than Boileau's, and happily many of them; others are more popular, others certainly more beloved; but I do not know that there is any more in vogue, nor perhaps, in certain respects, more eminent.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

Half of his verses became maxims or proverbs at their birth, entered into use or into the current of the language, and constitute still a part of the vocabulary of conversation. Three or four generations of industrious versifiers, including a few poets, have recognized him as 'the lawgiver of the French Parnassus.' His teachings, crossing our frontiers, have gone out to form schools in England and Germany. His very enemies, by their passionate, intemperate, and, above all, clumsy attacks, have contributed, as much or more than his deserts, to engrave, to characterize his name in the memory; and if there be any one who, not only for us who belong to his race, but also for foreigners, represents the French, or rather the classic spirit, with its qualities, but likewise with the defects which are the price or the obverse of these qualities, it is neither Molière, nor La Fontaine, nor Racine; it is he, it is Boileau, it is the author of the Satires and the Art of Poetry. . . . If there has been, from the Renaissance to the French Revolution, a classical ideal common to all Europe, to him belongs the honor of having conceived, defined, and fixed it more clearly than any one else.

Boileau understood only what he loved; he loved only what he thought himself capable of realizing at need in his own poetry; and thus it happened that, being destitute of sensibility, imagination, and a strong constitution, he at first assigned too inconsiderable a part in his doctrine to the picturesque, to the senses, and to emotion.

If in truth it is by virtue of thought that we are men, as we must fain agree with him that it is, still we are by no means pure intelligences, but are linked to a body; and our 'animality'—which can only be distinguished by an effort of abstraction—is not separate from our 'humanity.' The representation of the inferior parts of human nature, the portrayal even of the tumult, the disorder, or the delirium of the senses, is only to be forbidden to art in so far as there is mingled with it, as in some of our contemporary 'naturalists,' an evident intention to simplify art by mutilating nature,—mutilating it in a way different from that of Boileau, but none the less arbitrary for being opposite, and, one may add, much more dangerous. Since the instincts, the appetites, those remote and obscure impulses whose effects we can indeed arrest, but whose existence within us does not depend upon ourselves,—since these have their part to play in life, they must have their place in art, and we have no right to affect ignorance of them, since we have no power to prevent their existence. This is what Boileau ignored. And undoubtedly, in a certain sense, the systematic elimination of what is inferior in us constitutes the nobility of his doctrine, constitutes its morality, but at the same time constitutes its narrowness.

The lack of sensibility constitutes its tediousness. Not that sensibility is to be our chief or only guide. Variable as it is, both from individual to individual, and in the same person at different times, capricious, unequal, queen of error and injustice, if there is a faculty which we are bound to distrust, it is all that is enveloped in vagueness under the convenient but equivocal term of sensibility. The Rousseaus and Diderots of the next century undertook to furnish the proof of this. Nevertheless, since it is the principle or source of emotion, we cannot prevent sensibility from being likewise the cause of some of the keenest pleasures which we demand of art, as it is the soul of some of those very masterpieces upon which Boileau has lavished his praise, but regarding which we are inclined to ask—not without apprehension for him—whether he felt their full value. . . .

Boileau did not understand women, and because they are wanting both to his theory and his performance, these in turn lack everything which women introduce into art when they engage in it, that is, no less than one half of human nature. If I did not fear to sink into affectation, I should say that sensibility, which is the feminine element of the soul, must, in uniting with an art which is merely reasoned and rational, have a tendency to mitigate its excessive virility, and the excessive hardness resulting from such excessive virility. . . .

Another error lay in his ignoring the power of the imagination. Here again, Boileau undoubtedly knew by memorable examples that nothing is more dangerous for the poet than to write, as some one has said, with his imagination only, and to allow himself to be carried away by all the ardor of this deceptive power. . . . And we, who are contemporary with the Fall of an Angel and the Legend of the Ages, with Lamartine and Victor Hugo, know this still better. But for having turned upside down the truth of things, and for failing to recognize that, in spite of all its excesses, the imagination, that is to say the faculty of transcending nature, of even seeing in it what is not there, provided only that he make us see it, that imagination remains the supreme faculty of the poet, his original aptitude, one whose place can be supplied by no other, without which one may indeed be artist, writer, orator, but never poet—for this it is that we are bound to upbraid him. The reason is that he himself was not a poet. . . .

Originality, in Boileau's sense of the word, never existed save as originality of expression or of form; and in truth it is something, if one must think like all the rest of the world, at least to speak or write like oneself. But this alone will not suffice. Taken literally, and followed by artists less upright than himself, the theory of Boileau could not fail to result in the glorification of the commonplace under the name of the 'universal,' or in the apotheosis of common sense under the name of 'good sense.' But the question is to know what is common sense, and whether it were not oftentimes better to call it common error or common lunacy. . . .

If we look for the secret of Boileau's enduring authority, we shall find it nowhere else than in this concurrence, this entire agreement, this almost perfect coincidence of his qualities or his defects with the customary defects and the average qualities of the French character, bourgeois and classic. The very qualities which we most prize to-day — good sense and perspicuity, logic and naturalness, wit and reason — are those that he possessed; and as for his faults, we still hold by them. What Frenchman is there, for example, whom the vast imagination of a Hugo does not astound or scandalize much more than it excites his admiration? And how many are there of us who — I do not say understand, but who appreciate, who enjoy, who love English 'humor' or German 'gemüth.' . . . Contemporary with Louis XIV, this imitating the prince whose policy it was to open to the third estate the way to great civil employments, has substituted for a hundred and fifty years his bourgeois ideal for the wholly aristocratic ideal of the poets who preceded him. . . . Whatever we may say, this ideal, French as it is, must have been somewhat human as well, since for two centuries foreigners have been seeking to bend their genius to its yoke.

Fils, frère, oncle, cousin, beau-frère de greffiers,

[BRUNETIÈRE, L'Évolution des Genres, I. 14-18.]

If we look more closely at the matter, we shall discover that it is not two or three periods, vaguely distinguished from one another by chronology, that we have to study in the history, however cursory, of criticism, but that there are at least seven or eight, characterized by very precise traits. . . .

1. In the first period — which may be made to extend from 1550 to about 1605, and which is terminated by the names and work of Du Bellay at one extreme, and of Malherbe at the other — criticism, still uncertain of its object and its methods, and confronted with ancient masterpieces which had been known, it is true, for a long while, but which are now understood for the first time, endeavors to recognize, to analyze, to define, to catalogue the means, the reasons, and the causes of the impression which these works produce.

2. These reasons and these causes being once recognized, criticism endeavors to transform them into rules of art. Since analysis discovers that the Terentian comedy, for example, or the Virgilian epic, please because and by means of certain merits, well and duly labeled, the attempt is made to find means, recipes, or processes for reproducing these merits, and thus to introduce beauties into works along with rules. This second period in the history of French criticism lasted from 1610 to about 1660, or—if you prefer titles and names—from the publication of Chapelain's Preface to the Adone and the first Letters of Balzac to the appearance of the first Satires of Boileau.

3. For Boileau takes a step in advance; and these rules whose sole pretension had hitherto been that they had been observed by the ancients, these rules it is the real originality of the 'lawgiver of Parnassus' to have sought to establish at once in nature and reason. Boileau endeavors to show that if the rules agree with the practice of Homer and Pindar, still more do they with the truth of nature as observation reveals it to us, and with the authority of reason, such as all men agree in recognizing by that name. This is a third period, and it extends from 1660 to 1680 or 1690, from the triumphal entry of Boileau on the stage to the first attacks directed against his doctrines by the champions of the Moderns.

4. With the Dispute between the Ancients and the Moderns, from 1680 to about 1730, and from Perrault to Voltaire, we have a new period as interesting as any, and yet but imperfectly known. A few wits—of whom it must unfortunately be said that they seem in general to have been rather eccentric than courageous—declare war on the ancients, in other words on tradition, and, in the name of a confused idea of progress, demand for the author the right to belong to his own age, which is quite right, and to belong to no other, which is much more contestable. They only half way fail, but then they only half way succeed. The reasons for this partial success are various, as we shall see; at present we may say that the principal ones are: (1) their personal inability to equal those ancients whom they attack, to overcome by their Eclogues those of Theocritus, and by St. Paulinus the Odyssey; (2) the perplexity into which Boileau had thrown them from the outset, by postulating the imitation of nature as the foundation and measure of the rules in his Art of Poetry; (3) and finally, the error which they perpetrate concerning the nature and scope of the idea of progress.

5. This decides Voltaire, the chief literary authority of the eighteenth century, to take his stand—though after some hesitation—on the side of Boileau. If certain independents, like Diderot, for example, strive to resist, without very well knowing why, their protestations remain ineffectual. It is necessary to wait not only until Rousseau shall appear, but until a new generation shall perceive the consequences of his views. Meanwhile, it is Voltaire who is followed; it is from Voltaire that the Marmontels and Laharpes derive; in a word, it is the principles and ideas of Boileau—often contracted, but sometimes expanded by Voltaire—which continue to rule in criticism, and to occupy the fifth period, that which we will accordingly extend from 1730 to 1780 or 1790.

6. Here begins the history of modern criticism, and with it a new period. I will note its chief divisions by saying:

A. That with Madame de Staël and Chateaubriand, at the beginning of the century, a knowledge, still quite superficial, of foreign literatures, and a knowledge hardly more exact of an older past, oblige our authors, by giving them the idea of new beauties, which are to be found neither in our national classics nor in the ancients, to verify for the first time the validity and the substance of their rules.
B. That with Villedain — from whose name, in this conquest, those of Guizot and Cousin can hardly be separated — there is added to the change of taste caused by the knowledge of foreign literatures and of history a change no less profound wrought by a wider, exacter, and, one may say, totally new knowledge of the relations between literary productions and the epochs, institutions, form and structure of the society whose expression they are.

C. That with Sainte-Beuve the foundation is widened, the point of view shifted, and the methods of criticism transformed by psychology, physiology, and the consideration of how each work is related not only to its epoch, but to its author, his temperament and his education.

D. Finally, that with Taine criticism aspires to become a science, even if it does not succeed; and that, in any event, it seeks to supplement its means of information by the means — if I may use the term — by the methods and processes, of natural history.

4. THE TRANSLATIONS AND TRANSLATORS.

[Dictionary of National Biography.]

Howes, Francis (1776–1844), translator, fourth son of the Rev. Thomas Howes of Morningthorpe, Norfolk, by Susan, daughter of Francis Linge of Spinworth in the same county, was born in 1776, and was educated at the Norwich grammar school. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1794, graduated B.A. in 1798 as eleventh wrangler, and proceeded M.A. in 1804. In 1799 he obtained the members’ prize. His chief college friend was John (afterwards Sir John) Williams, the judge, who subsequently allowed him 100£ a year. He held various curacies, and in 1815 became a minor canon of Norwich Cathedral, afterwards holding the rectories successively of Alderford (from 1826) and of Framingham Pigot (from 1829). He died at Norwich in 1844, and was buried in the west cloister of the cathedral. He married early Susan Smithson, and left issue; one of his sisters, Margaret, married Edward Hawkins, and was the mother of Edward Hawkins, provost of Oriel.

Howes published the following translations into English verse: 1. Miscellaneous Poetical Translations, London, 1806, 8vo. 2. The Satires of Persius; with Notes, London, 1809, 8vo. 3. The Epodes and Secular Ode of Horace, Norwich, 1841, 8vo, privately printed. 4. The First Book of Horace's Satires, privately printed, Norwich, 1842, 8vo. After his death his son, C. Howes, published a collection of his translations, London, 1845, 8vo. The merit of his translations was recognized by Conington in the preface to his version of the satires and epistles of Horace. Howes composed epitaphs for various monuments in Norwich Cathedral.

[JOHNSON, Life of Pitt.]

Christopher Pitt, of whom whatever I shall relate, more than has been already published, I owe to the kind communication of Dr. Warton, was born in 1699 at Blandford, the son of a physician much esteemed. He was, in 1714, received as a scholar into Winchester College, where he was distinguished by exercises of uncommon elegance, and, at his removal to New College in 1719, presented to the electors, as the product of his private and voluntary studies, a complete version of Lucan's poem, which he did not then know to have been translated by Rowe. This is an instance of early diligence which well deserves to be recorded. The suppression of such a work, recommended by such uncommon circumstances, is to be regretted. It is indeed culpable to load libraries with superfluous books, but incitements to early excellence are never superfluous, and from this example the danger is not great of many imitations.

When he had resided at his College three years, he was presented to the rectory of Pimpern in Dorsetshire (1722), by his relation, Mr. Pitt, of Stratfeildsea in Hampshire; and, resigning his fellowship, continued at Oxford two years longer, till he became Master of Arts (1724). He probably about this time translated Vida’s Art of Poetry, which Tristram’s splendid edition had then made popular. In this translation he distinguished himself, both by its general elegance and by the skilful adaptation of his numbers to the images expressed, a beauty which Vida has with great ardor enforced and exemplified. He then retired to his living, a place very pleasing by its situation, and therefore likely to excite the imagination of a poet, where he passed the rest of his life, reverenced for his virtue, and beloved for the softness of his temper and the easiness of his manners. Before strangers he had something of the scholar’s timidity or distrust, but when he became familiar he was in a very high degree cheerful and entertaining. His general benevolence procured general respect; and he passed a life placid and honorable, neither too great for the kindness of the low, nor too low for the notice of the great.

At what time he composed his miscellany, published in 1727, it is not easy nor necessary to know; those which have dates appear to have been very early productions, and I have not observed that any rise above mediocrity.

The success of his Vida animated him to a higher undertaking, and in his thirtieth year he published a version of the first book of the Æneid. This being, I suppose, commended by his friends, he some time afterwards added three or four more, with an advertisement in which he represents himself as translating with great indifference, and with a progress of which himself was hardly conscious. This can hardly be true, and, if true, is nothing to the reader. At last, without any further contention with his modesty, or any awe of the name of Dryden, he gave us a complete English Æneid, which I am sorry not to see joined in the late publication with his other poems. It would have been pleasing to have an opportunity of comparing the two best translations that perhaps were ever produced by one nation of the same author.

Pitt, engaging as a rival with Dryden, naturally observed his failures, and avoided them; and, as he wrote after Pope's Iliad, he had an example of an exact, equable, and splendid versification. With these advantages, seconded by great diligence, he might successfully labor particular passages, and escape many errors. If the two versions are compared, perhaps the result would be that Dryden leads the reader forward by his general vigor and sprightliness, and Pitt often stops him to contemplate the excellence of a single couplet; that Dryden's faults are forgotten in the hurry of delight, and that Pitt's beauties are neglected in the languor of a cold and listless perusal; that Pitt pleases the critic, and Dryden the people; that Pitt is quoted, and Dryden read. He did not long enjoy the reputation which this great work deservedly conferred; for he left the world in 1748, and lies buried under a stone at Blandford, on which is this inscription:

In Memory of
CHR. PITT, clerk, M.A.
Very eminent
for his talents in poetry; and yet more for the universal candor of his mind, and the primitive simplicity of his manners.
He lived innocent,
and died beloved,
Apr. 13, 1748,
aged 48.
ILLUSTRATIVE COMMENTS.

[Scott, Edition of Dryden, 15. 229.]

This piece [the translation from Boileau] was inserted among Dryden's Works, upon authority of the following advertisement by his publisher Jacob Tonson.

"This translation of Monsieur Boileau's Art of Poetry was made in the year 1680, by Sir William Soame of Suffolk, Baronet; who, being very intimately acquainted with Mr. Dryden, desired his revisal of it. I saw the manuscript lie in Mr. Dryden's hands for above six months, who made very considerable alterations in it, particularly the beginning of the Fourth Canto; and it being his opinion that it would be better to apply the poem to English writers than keep to the French names, as it was first translated, Sir William desired he would take the pains to make that alteration; and accordingly that was entirely done by Mr. Dryden.

"The poem was first published in the year 1683. Sir William was after sent ambassador to Constantinople, in the reign of King James, but died in the voyage.—J. T."

To give weight to Tonson's authority, it may be added that great part of the poem bears marks of Dryden's polishing hand, and that some entire passages show at once his taste in criticism, principles, and prejudices.
HORACE.
HORACE'S ART OF POETRY.

WITH THE TRANSLATION BY HOWES.

SUPPOSE some painter, for the whim, should trace
A horse's neck with human head and face,
And limbs from various animals expressed
In plumage of as various hues invest,
So that the same fantastic piece may show
A fair maid upwards, a foul fish below,—
Were you admitted to the motley sight,
Methinks you'd laugh, my friends, and well you might.
Yet not less strange, my Pisos, to the ear
Of sober sense that poem must appear,
Which deals in shapes extravagant and vain,
Wild as the phantoms of a feverish brain;
Where, no two members to one whole referred,
All is grotesque, incongruous, and absurd.
'Painters (you'll say) and bards, the world agrees,

HUMANO capiti cervicem pictor equinam
Jungere si velit, et varias inducere plumas
Undique collatis membris, ut turpiter atrum
Desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne,
Spectatum admissi risum teneatis, amici?
Credite, Pisones, isti tabulae fore librum
Persimilem, cujus velut ægri somnia vanæ
Fingentur species, ut nec pes nec caput uni
Reddatur formæ. 'Pictoribus atque poetis
Are privileged to dare what flights they please.'
We own that much is due for license' sake,
And give it freely as we freely take;
But let them stop where nature stops at least,
Nor couple tame with savage, bird with beast.
Poems of high attempt and promise vast
Oft dwindle to a dreary void at last,
With here and there a purple remnant found
Tagged on to throw a tawdry glare around.
Diana's shrine embowered in tufted shades,
With streamlets trickling through the verdant glades,
The stately Rhine, the bow that spans the sky,
By turns, like tinsel trappings, catch the eye.
Not that such themes, well-timed, are void of grace;
They are not bad; but they are out of place.
Say 'tis your knack to draw a cypress-tree—
What then? you're hired to paint a storm at sea
For some wrecked sailor. If the wheel begin
A vase, why starts me up a nipperkin?
In short, to mark this maxim never cease—
Let all you write be one and of a piece.

Quidlibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas.'
Scimus et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim,
Sed non ut placidis coeant immitia, non ut
Serpentes avibus geminentur, tigribus agni.
Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis
Purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
Adsuitur pannis, cum lucus et ara Dianæ
Et properantis aqœæ per amœnos ambitus agros
Aut flumen Rhenum aut pluvious describitur arcus.
Sed nunc non erat his locus. Et fortasse cupressum
Scis simulare; quid hoc, si fractis enat exspes
Navibus ære dato qui pingitur? Amphora cœpit
Institui; currente rota cur urceus exit?
Denique sit quod vis simplex duttaxat et unum.
Dear sire, and offspring worthy of your sire!
We bards are dupes to what ourselves admire.
Would I be brief, I grow confused and coarse;
• Who aims at smoothness, fails in fire and force;
In him who soars aloft, bombast is found;
Who fears to face the tempest, crawls aground.
Who courts variety, and fain would ring
A thousand changes on the selfsame string,
Will paint, as 'twere in fancy's wildest mood,
Boars in the wave and dolphins in the wood.
Thus even error, shunned without address,
Breeds error different in its kind, not less.

The meanest hand at sculpture shall not fail
To hit the waving hair or mold a nail,
Yet mars the tout-ensemble, since his soul
Lacks energy to grasp a perfect whole.
Genius thus circumscribed, should I aspire
To works of taste, I would no more desire,
Than shock with hideous nose each passer-by,
Praised for my jetty hair and sloe-black eye.

First, ye that write, mark well your proper field;

Maxima pars vatum, pater et juvenes patre digni,
Decipimur specie recti. Brevis esse laboro,
Obscurus fio; sectantem levia nervi
Deficiunt animique; professus grandia turget;
Serpit humi tutus nimium timidusque procelae.
Qui variare cupit rem prodigialiter unam,
Delphinum silvis appingit, fluctibus aprum.
In vitium ducit culpæ fuga, si caret arte.
Æmilium circa ludum faber imus et ungues
Exprimet et molles imitabitur ære capillos,
Infelix operis summa, quia ponere totum
Nesciet. Hunc ego me, si quid componere curem,
Non magis esse velim, quam naso vivere pravo,
Spectandum nigris oculis nigroque capillo.
Sume materiam vestris, qui scribitis, æquam
Let each select some theme which he can wield;
And, ere he tax his shoulders, weigh with care
What freight they can and what they cannot bear.
His pen shall words a ready host attend,
And method light him to his journey's end.
   Of method this I deem the pride and grace—
Whate'er is said, to say it in due place,
Much to reserve till apt occasion call,
Take this, leave that, and fitly time it all.
   In choice of diction would you be admired,
Nice care and shrewd adroitness is required.
Sometimes a dextrous phrase shall cheat the view,
And lend to well-known words the air of new.
But if need be abstruser thoughts to dress,
And in new terms new notions to express,
We'll grant you now and then to frame a word
Which the high-girt Cethegi never heard;
Nor shall such freedoms, if discreetly used
And taken with reserve, be e'er refused.
But those least shock the ear which trace their course,
With slight deflexion, from a Grecian source.

Viribus, et versate diu quid ferre recusent,
Quid valeant humeri: cui lecta potenter erit res,
Nec facundia deseret hunc nec lucidus ordo.
   Ordinis haec virtus erit et venus, aut ego fallor,
Ut jam nunc dicat jam nunc debentia dici,
Pleraque differat et præsens in tempus omissat;
Hoc amet, hoc spernat promissi carminis auctor.
   In verbis etiam tenuis cautusque serendis
Dixeris egregie, notum si callida verbum
Reddiderit junctura novum. Si forte necesse est
Indiciis monstrare recentibus abdita rerum,
Fingere cinctutis non exaudita Cethegis
Continget, dabiturque licentia sumpta pudenter;
Et nova dictaque nuper habebunt verba fidem, si
Graeco fonte cadent, parce detorta. Quid autem
For say, shall Rome from present bards withhold
A grace so largely lavished on the old?
Shall Virgil or shall Varius be forbid
To do what Plautus or Cæcilius did?
If, when a Cato spake or Ennius sung,
They gifted with fresh stores their native tongue,
Must I, a modern, with the power, forbear
To swell the public stock with my poor share?
The poet’s right none did — none dare — deny,
To put forth words impressed with recent die.

As Autumn sweeps the grove’s green pride away,
The new leaves budding as the old decay,
So words which flaunt their time in vernal bloom
Must fall, and fresh ones flourish in their room.
Alas, proud man! thyself and all that’s thine
Soon shed their transient glories and decline.
The labored pier that breaks the baffled tide
And opes a bay where anchored navies ride; —
The moor and watery waste reclaimed, where now
The slow ox drags the fertilizing plough; —
The river taught to spare the ripening grain
And by a safer route to join the main; —

Cæcilio Plautoque dabit Romanus ademptum
Vergilio Varioque? Ego cur acquirere paucâ
Si possum invideo, cum lingua Catonis et Enni
Seronem patrium ditaverit et nova rerum
Nomina protulerit? Licuit semperque licebit
Signatum præsente nota producere nomen.

Ut silvæ foliis pronos mutantur in annos,
Prima cadunt, ita verborum vetus interit ætas,
Et juvenum ritu florent modo nata vigentque.
Debemur morti nos nostraque, sive receptus
Terra Neptunus classes Aquilonibus arcei,
Regis opus, sterilisve diu palus aptaque remis
Vicinas urbes alit et grave sentit aratum,
Scu cursum mutavit iniquum frugibus amnis,
Such are thy noblest works, and such decay;
And shall the shadowy tribes of language stay?
Shall speech alone resist Time's envious tooth,
And live and flourish in perennial youth?
Full many a word, now lost, again shall rise,
And many a word shall droop which now we prize,
As shifting fashion stamps the doom of each,
Sole umpire, arbiter, and guide of speech.

What numbers suit the daring bard who sings
Embattled hosts and kings encountering kings,
Homer has shown. — In couplets short and long
First pensive sorrow poured her plaintive song;
In after-times, although the wish were gained
And tears gave place to smiles, the verse remained;
But elegy's soft lay who first struck out,
Critics still argue and the court's in doubt. —
Rage gave Archilochus a loftier tone,
And armed him with iambs all his own.

These did the sock and these the buskined muse,
• As suited to discourse alternate, choose,—
A measure for life's bustling action fit

Doctus iter melius, mortalia facta peribunt,
Nedum sermonum stet honos et gratia vivax.
Multa renascentur, quae jam cecidere, cadentque

Qué nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,
Quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi.

Res gestae regumque ducumque et tristia bella
Quo scribi possent numero monstravit Homerus.
Versibus impariter junctis querimonia primum,
Post etiam inclusa est voti sententia compos.
Quis tamen exiguos elegos emiserit auctor,
Grammatici certant et adhue sub judice lis est.
Archilochum proprio rabies armavit iambo;
Hunc socci cepere pedem grandesque cothurni,
Alternis aptum sermonibus, et populares
And towering o'er the thunder of the pit. —
To the bold lyre the favoring Muse has given
To chant the powers and progeny of Heaven,
The champion crowned, the conquering courser's line,
Love's tender cares, and joys of generous wine.

To give each piece its marked specific hue,
Hit the nice shades and keep the coloring true,
If niggard nature feels a task too hard,
Why am I honored with the name of bard?
Why blush to learn, if ignorant, and prefer,
Rather than mend my error, still to err?
The comic scene revolts at being told
In verse of tragic texture strong and bold;
Nor less Thyestes' horrid feast disdains
The sock's light chit-chat and colloquial strains.
Let but each style enjoy its proper place,
Each shall appear with dignity and grace.
Yet Comedy at times her voice can raise,
And wrathful Chremes rails in swelling phrase.
The tragic hero too, subdued by woes,
Stoops from his height to wail in homely prose:

Vincentem strepitus et natum rebus agendis.
Musa dedit fidibus divos puerosque deorum
Et pugilem victorem et equum certamine primum
Et juvenum curas et libera vina referre.

Descriptas servare vices operumque colores
Cur ego si nequeo ignoroque poeta salutor?
Cur nescire pudens prave quam discere malo?
Versibus exponi tragicis res comica non volt.
Indignatur item privatis ac prope socco
Dignis carminibus narrari cena Thyestae.
Singula quaeque locum teneant sortita decentem.
Interdum tamen et vocem comedia tollit,
Iratusque Chremes tumido deligit ore;
Et tragicus plerumque dolet sermone pedestri
Peleus and Telephus, forlorn and poor,
Spout their loud fustian and big words no more,
Would they one throb of sympathy impart,
And touch with kindred pangs the hearer's heart.
'Tis not enough that poetry combine
All fancy's charms in every sounding line;
Impassioned let her be, and melt at will
The soul to pity, or with horror thrill.
From face to face as smiles contagious creep,
So weeps the according eye with those that weep;
Who claims my tears, must first display his own,
Then shall I catch his pangs and share his moan.
But if ye rant as if no grief were nigh,
If in your speech your sufferings ye belie,
Ye exiled heroes! maugre all your woes,
'Tis ten to one I either laugh or doze.
Sad words befit the brow with grief o'erhung;
Anger, that fires the eyeball, bids the tongue
Breathe proud defiance; sportive jest and jeer
Become the gay; grave maxims the severe.
For nature, working in our nice machine,
First molds the passions to life's fitful scene,

Telephus et Peleus, cum pauper et exsul uterque
Proicit ampullas et sesquipedalia verba,
Si curat cor spectantis tetigisse querela.
Non satis est pulchra esse poemata; dulcia sunt,
Et quocumque volent animum auditoris agunto.
Ut ridentibus arrident, ita flentibus adsunt
Humani voltus: si vis me flere, dolendum est
Primum ipsi tibi; tunc tua me infortunia laedent,
Telephe vel Peleu; male si mandata loqueris,
Aut dormitabo aut ridebo. Tristia maestum
Vollum verba decent, iratum plena minarum,
Ludentem lasciva, severum seria dictu.
Format enim natura prius nos intus ad omnem
Gladdens, or goads to wrath, or, fraught with care,
Drags down to earth and wings us with despair;
Anon a herald in the tongue she finds
Prompt to proclaim each movement of our minds.
But if the actor play not to the life,
If with his words his fortunes seem at strife,
Him knights and commons, horse and foot, shall scoff,
And tittering thousands hoot the blunderer off.

Each speaker let his speech characterize:
For sure a broad and glaring difference lies,
Whether a god or hero mount the stage;
The brisk young spark or man mature in age;
The dame of rank or nurse of prattling vein;
The wandering seaman or the peaceful swain;
One that Assyria or that Colchis fed;
He that at Argos or at Thebes was bred.

In painting characters, or follow fame,
Or keep your fancy-piece throughout the same.
If haply to the stage you summon back
Great Peleus’ son, adhere to Homer’s track:
Proud, stern, relentless, brave, the hero draw,
His title conquest, and the sword his law.

Fortunarum habitum; juvat aut impellit ad iram,
Aut ad humum mæore gravi deducit et angit; 110
Post effert animi motus interprete lingua.
Si dicentis erunt fortunis absōna dicta,
Romani tollent equites peditesque cachinnum.

Intererit multum divusne loquatur an heros,
Maturusne senex an adhuc florente juventa 115
Fervidus, et matrona potens an sedula nutrix,
Mercatorne vagus cultorne virentis agelli,
Colchus an Assyrius, Thebis nutritus an Argis.

Aut famam sequere aut sibi convenientia finge.
Scriptor honoratum si forte reponis Achillem, 120
Impiger, iracundus, inexorabilis, acer
Jura neget sibi nata, nihil non arroget armis.
Fierce be Medea and untamed by ill;
Ixion treacherous and ungrateful still;
Ino a mourner o'er her slaughtered child;
Io an outcast; and Orestes wild.
But if you dare to launch upon the stage
Originals that ne'er graced poet's page,
Let them one tenor to the last pursue,
Consist throughout and to themselves be true.
With truth's discriminating traits to fill
A general outline, asks no vulgar skill;
And safer shall the bard his pen employ,
With yore, to dramatize the Tale of Troy,
Than, venturing trackless regions to explore,
Delineate characters untouched before.
Yet here and there the public ground shall yield
Of private property an ample field,
If neither in the trite routine you plod,
There only treading where the rest have trod,
Nor word for word with servile care translate,
Nor, closely copying, leap into a strait
Whence fear of shame and your own rule to boot
Forbid you to release your tangled foot.

Sit Medea ferox invictaque, flebilis Ino,
Perfidus Ixion, Io vaga, tristis Orestes.
Si quid inexpertum scenaæ committis et audes
Personam formare novam, servetur ad imum
Qualis ab incepto processerit et sibi constet.
Difficile est proprie communia dicere; tuque
Rectius Iliacum carmen deducis in actus,
Quam si profferes ignota indictaque primus.
Publica materies privati juris erit, si
Non circa vilem patulumque moraberis orbem,
Nec verbum verbo curabis reddere fidus
Interpres, nec desilies imitator in artum,
Unde pedem proferre pudor vetet aut operis lex.
Profess not with the Cyclic bard to sing
‘Of Ilium’s far-famed war and hapless king.’
What are this boaster’s proud pretensions worth?
The mountain teems, and gives a titmouse birth!
Mark with what simple majesty the strain
Of him begins who never vaunts in vain—
‘Sing, Muse! the man who, when Troy’s bulwarks fell,
Trod various realms and marked their manners well.’
With him no transient blaze in smoke expires,
But from the smoke burst forth abiding fires,
From which, as fancy works, new wonders rise
To flash amazement on the ravished eyes,— Antiphates, Charybdis’ howling wave,
The dogs of Scylla, and the Cyclops’ cave.
Nor does he run his subject out of breath
In dry detail from Meleager’s death
To Diomed’s return; nor yet begins
The Trojan war from Leda and her twins;
But posting onwards, brooking no delay,
To the mid-theme he boldly bursts his way.
Much he anticipates as if ’twere known;

Nec sic incipies, ut scriptor cyclicus olim:
‘Fortunam Priami cantabo et nobile bellum.’
Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatus?
Parturient montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.
Quanto rectius hic, qui nil molitur inepte:
‘Dic mihi Musa virum, captae post tempora Trojae
Qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes.’
Non fumum ex fulgore, sed ex fumo dare lucem
Cogitat, ut speciosa dehinc miracula promat,
Antiphaten Scyllamque et cum Cyclope Charybdin;
Nec reditum Diomedis ab interitu Meleagri,
Nec gemino bellum Trojanum orditur ab ovo.
Semper ad eventum festinat et in medias res
Non secus ac notas auditorem rapit, et quae
Desperat tractata nitescere posse, relinquit;
Much that he feels would tire he lets alone;
And so adroitly mingle false with true,
So with his fair illusions cheats the view,
That all the parts—beginning, middle, end—
In one harmonious compound sweetly blend.

Hear now what I and all the town demands,
If you would have your audience clap their hands,
In patience seated till the curtain draws
And the last speaker bows and begs applause.
Mark in each stage of life how nature veers,
The temper varying with the varying years.
What time the tongue has mastered every sound,
And steadier footsteps learn to print the ground,
Behold the schoolboy frolicsome and gay
Scampering to join his comrades at their play,
Vexed for a straw, but soothed as soon as vexed,
In tears this moment and in smiles the next.
The beardless youth, his freedom proud to gain,
Loves horses, hounds, and Mars's sunny plain;
Ductile as wax to vice his yielding soul,
Deaf to the warning voice of dull control,
Profuse of purse, impatient of delay,

Atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet,
Primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet imum.

Tu, quid ego et populus mecum desideret, audi.
Si plau soris eges aulæa manentis et usque
Sessuri donec cantor 'Vos plaudite' dicit,
Ætatis cujusque notandi sunt tibi mores,
Mobilibusque decor naturis dandus et annis.
Reddere qui voces jam scit puer et pede certo
Signat humum, gestit paribus colludere, et iram
Colligit ac ponit temere, et mutatur in horas.

Imberbus juvenis, tandem custode remoto,
Gaudet equis canibusque et aprici gramine campi,
Cereus in vitium flecti, monitoribus asper,
Taking no thought but for the present day,
Of lofty spirit, of affections strong,
Pleased with what's new, but pleased with nothing long.
Shifting his views, see riper manhood crave
Place, power, and patronage, — ambition's slave;
Wary betimes each oversight to shun,
And slow to do what he may wish undone.
A thousand ills declining age attend,
Still brooding o'er its bags, still loath to spend,
In counsel cold, and tardy to decide,
In thrifty forecast placing all its pride;
Full of prospective bliss and present pain,
Suspicious and splenetic, fretful, vain;
Loud in the praises of the good old times,
And croaking stern rebuke on modern crimes.
Thus, as life's seasons in succession flow,
Our tempers change, our passions come and go.
Beware then in youth's portrait to employ
The tints of age, nor mingle man with boy;
To every period with precision give
Its proper cast, and bid your picture live.

Utilium tardus provisor, prodigus æris,
Sublimis cupidusque et amata relinquere pernix.
Conversis studiis ætas animusque virili
Quærit opes et amicitias, inservit honori,
Commisisse cavet quod mox mutare laboret.
Multa senem circumveniunt incommoda, vel quod
Quærit et inventis miser abstinet ac timet uti,
Vel quod res omnis timide gelideque ministrat,
Dilator, spe longus, iners, avidusque futuri,
Difficilis, querulus, laudator temporis acti
Se puero, castigator censorque minorum.
Multa ferunt anni venientes commoda secum;
Multa recedentes adimunt. Ne forte seniles
Mandentur juveni partes pueroque viriles,
Semper in adjunctis ævoque morabimur aptis.
All facts which in the fable have a share
Pass on the stage,—or are recorded there.
Those which a tale shall through the ear impart
With fainter characters impress the heart
Than those which, subject to the eye's broad gaze,
The pleased spectator to himself conveys.
Yet drag not on the stage each horrid scene,
Nor shock the sight with what should pass within.
This let description's milder medium show,
And leave to eloquence her tale of woe.
Let not the cruel Colchian mother slay
Her smiling infants in the face of day;
Nor Atreus crown the board with impious food,
And feast a brother with congenial blood;
Nor Procone's form the rising plumage take;
Nor Cadmus sink into a slinky snake.
Much that were only passing strange if heard,
When seen, revolted sense declares absurd.
To five acts lengthened be the piece, not more,
That asks the long applause and loud encore;
Nor in the unraveling be a god displayed,
Save where the knot disdains all humbler aid;

Aut agitur res in scenis, aut acta refertur.
Segnius irritant animos demissa per aurem
Quam que sunt oculis subjecta fidelibus, et que
Ipse sibi tradit spectator. Non tamen intus
Digna geri promes in scenam, multaque tolles
Ex oculis que mox narret facundia present.
Ne pueros coram populo Medea trucidet,
Aut humana palam coquat exta nefarius Atreus,
Aut in avem Procone vertatur, Cadmus in anguem.
Quodcumque ostendis mihi sic, incredulus odi.
Neve minor neu sit quinto production actu
Fabula, que posci volt et spectata reponi.
Nec deus intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus
Nor in distracting dialogue engage
At once four speakers on the crowded stage.
The Chorus should an actor's part sustain,
Join in the busy scene nor join in vain;
Nor chant between the acts what does not tend
To aid the theme and with the action blend.
A ready patron still on virtue's side,
With friendly love her votaries let it guide,
Greet those who fear to swerve from duty's path,
And curb with bold rebuke revenge and wrath;
Let it the tribute of its praise afford
To sober diet and the simple board;
Espouse fair justice, the support of states,
Law's righteous sword, and peace with open gates;
Hold fast the secret trusted to its care;
And to the gods put up a fervent prayer
That fickle Fortune may at their behest
Turn from the oppressor to relieve the oppressed.

The pipe in days of yore, not brazen-bound
As now, nor rivaling the trumpet's sound,
But of few stops and slender compass, still Served to support the Chorus, and to fill
A narrow line of seats that with no crowd

Inciderit: nec quarta loqui persona laboret.

Actoris partes chorus officiumque virile
Defendat, nee quid medios intercinit actus
Quod non proposito conducat et hæreat apte.
Ille bonis faveatque et consilietur amice,
Et regat iratos et amet peccare timentes;
Ille dapes laudet mensæ brevis, ille salubrem
Justitiam legesque et apertis otia portis;
Ille tegat commissa, deosque precetur et oret
Ut reeat miseris, abeat fortuna superbis.

Tibia non, ut nunc, orichalco vincet, tubæque
Æmula, sed tenuis simplexque foramine pauco
Adspirare et adesse choris erat utilis, atque
Of countless hearers hitherto o'erflowed —
Seats, where a people thin in numbers yet,
Decent and chaste and plain and frugal, met.
But when by war the realm was wider grown,
And walls of ampler circuit girt the town;
When, on a day of revels, to begin
The feast from noontide was no more a sin,
A larger license and a scope less rude
Both to the music and the verse accrued.
For what should that mixed audience have of taste,
Clown grouped with cit, and boors by nobles placed?
Thus did the piper superadd erelong
The charms of gesture to the powers of song,
With pantomimic grace his sense expressed,
And trailed along the boards the floating vest.
Thus too, its tones increased, the lyre severe
Poured richer warblings on the ravished ear;
The muse in loftier numbers learned to soar,
Imped her bold plume for flights untried before,
And, fraught with fire prophetic, bade each line
Rival the raptures of the Delphian shrine.

Nondum spissa nimis compleere sedilia flatu;
Quo sane populus numerabilis, utpote parvus,
Et frugi castusque verecundusque coibat.
Postquam coepit agros extendere victor et urbes
Latior amplecti murus vinoque diurno
Placari Genius festis impune diebus,
Accessit numerisque modisque licentia major.
Indoctus quid enim saperet liberque laborum
Rusticus urbano confusus, turpis honesto?
Sic priscæ motumque et luxuriem addidit arti
Tibicen traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem;
Sic etiam fidibus voces crevere severis,
Et tulit eloquium insolitum facundia preceptis,
Utiliumque sagax rerum et divina futuri
Sortilegis non discrepuit sententia Delphis.
He that in tragic lay late strained his throat
To win the paltry prize — a shaggy goat,
Soon bared upon the stage a sylvan crew
And brought the wanton satyrs forth to view;
The solemn tone not wholly laid aside,
To humor and burlesque his hand applied;
And sought by grateful novelty of song
To rivet to their seats a boozey throng
From festive rites and revels just set free,
Ripe for loose pranks and full of tipsy glee.
Yet so to shift from grave to gay 'twere fit,
So temper the light satyrs' saucy wit,
That not each god, each hero, that of late
Stalked forth in purple robes and royal state,
Anon should all his pomp of speech let down
To the low slang and gabble of a clown,
Or, steering heavenwards his flight too fast,
Grasp empty clouds and soar into bombast.
The Tragic Muse, with bashfulness severe,
Disdaining the base gibe and trivial jeer,
Will, like a matron whom the priest perchance
Calls at some solemn festival to dance,
Amid the skittish satyrs still be seen
Distinguished by her staid and sober mien.
Were I, my friends, to write satyrical plays,
Not wholly to low terms and homely phrase
Would I restrict my pen; nor so refuse
The richer coloring of the tragic muse,
As that no difference should be marked between
What wagging Davus in the comic scene
Or Pythis prates, when in her knavery bold
She bubbles simple Simo of his gold,—
And what Silenus, when he steps abroad
The foster guardian of the nurslng god.
Some well-known legend should support my theme;
This with such art I’d trace, that each should deem
He too could match the verse,—then task his brain,
And toiling long confess his efforts vain.
Such merit is to plan and structure due!
To vulgar themes such glory may accrue!
But let the fauns, still mindful what they are,
Fetched from the woods, by my advice beware
(As if at Rome they all their life had led,
Born in our streets and in our Forum bred)

Intererit Satyris paulum pudibunda protervis.
Non ego inornata et dominantia nomina solum
Verbaque, Pisones, Satyrorum scriptor amabo;
Nec sic enitar tragico differre colori,
Ut nihil intersit, Davusne loquatur et audax
Pythis, emuncto lucrata Simone talentum,
An custos famulusque dei Silenus alumi.
Ex noto fictum carmen sequar, ut sibi quivis
Speret idem, sudet multum frustraque labore
Ausus idem: tantum series juncturaque pollet,
Tantum de medio sumptis accedit honoris.
Silvis deducti caveant, me judice, Fauni,
Ne velut innati triviis ac pæne forense
They tattle in a languid, love-sick style,
Or bolt unseemly jests and ribald vile.
For each that boasts birth, rank, and consequence,
At such low trash is apt to take offense,
Nor all with patience hears or deigns to crown
That with the nut-and-gray-pease tribe goes down.

Two syllables, first short, then long, combine
To frame the light iambus; whence the line,
Though to the ear six several beats it bears,
Was surnamed trimeter, and scanned by pairs.
This measure, as its pristine form was cast,
Flows uniformly on from first to last.
But after no long time, to greet the ear
With more majestic grace and weight severe,
The foot, its birthright waived, generous and free,
Took in joint partnership the grave spondee,
One special privilege reserving still —
That every even place itself should fill.
‘Not so (says one) march the bold trimeters
Of Accius, Ennius; there it scarce occurs.’
Yet, maugre such high names, that author’s page

Aut nimium teneris juvenentur versibus unquam,
Aut immunda crepent ignominiosaque dicta.
Offenduntur enim, quibus est equus et pater et res,
Nec, si quid fricti ciceris probat et nucis emptor,
Æquis accipiunt animis donantve corona.

Syllaba longa brevi subjecta vocatur iambus,
Pes citus; unde etiam trimetris accrescere jussit
Nomen iambeis, cum senos redderet ictus
Primus ad extremum similis sibi. Non ita pridem,
Tardior ut paulo graviorque veniret ad aures,
Spondeos stabiles in jura paterna recepit
Commodus et patiens, non ut de sede secunda
Cederet aut quarta socialiter. Hic et in Acci
Nobilibus trimetris apparet rarus, et Enni
In scenam missos cum magno pondere versus
Who thus with ponderous cadence loads the stage,
Speaks either gross neglect and slovenly haste,
Or ignorance of his art and want of taste.
Not every reader, it is true, has skill
To judge if verse be modulated ill;
And too indulgent Rome has fondly nursed
This laxness in her poets from the first.
But what of that? If readers will be fools,
Must I run riot and despise all rules,
Safe in that fault, forsooth, which, even if seen
By all the world, long use perhaps shall screen?
Poor boast, to say, 'I have escaped from blame,
But after all to praise can urge no claim!'
Your standard then be Greece! Her models bright
By day peruse, and reperuse by night!
Our forefathers, good-natured, easy folks,
Extolled the numbers and enjoyed the jokes
Of Plautus, prompt both these and those to hear
With tolerant — not to say with tasteless — ear;
At least if you and I with sense are blest
To tell a clownish from a courtly jest,
Or, by the finger's aid and ear's to boot,

Aut opera celeris nimium curaque carentis
Aut ignorantæ premit artis crimine turpi.
Non quisivis videt immodulata poemata judex,
Et data Romanis venia est indigna poetis.
Idcircone vager scribamque licenter? an omnes 265
Visuros peccata putem mea, tutus et intra
Spem venie cautus? Vitavi denique culpam,
Non laudem merui. Vos exemplaria Graeca
Nocturna versate manu, versate diurna.
At vestri proavi Plautinos et numeros et 270
Laudavere sales: nimium patienter utrumque,
Ne dicam stulte, mirati, si modo ego et vos
Scimus inurbanum lepido seponere dicto,
Can take just measure of a verse and foot.
Thespis, we’re told, the tragic song struck out,
And in rude wagons hawked his plays about;
His corps dramatic, every brow with lees
Of wine besmeared, there sung and acted these.
Next Æschylus brought on the trailing pall
And visor, reared a stage on platform small,
To strut in buskined pride his actors taught,
And gave big utterance to the manly thought.
The Antique Comedy was next begun,
Nor light applause her frolic freedom won;
But, into slanderous outrage waxing fast,
Called for the curb of law; that law was passed;
And thus, its right of wrongdoing quickly o’er,
Her Chorus sank abashed, to rise no more.

Naught have our venturous poets left untried,
Nor is it in the wreath which crowns their pride
The meanest plume, that many a Roman bard
Spurning the Grecian track, has boldly dared
To chant domestic themes — alike, I trow,
In bordered robe or plain, high life or low.

Legitimumque sonum digitis callemus et aure.
Ignotum tragicæ genus invenisse Camene
Dicitur et plaustris vexisse poemata Thespis,
Quæ canerent agerentque peruncti lacibus ora.
Post hunc, personæ pallæque repertor honestæ,
Æschylus et modicis instravit pulpita tignis
Et docuit magnumque loqui nitique cothurno.
Successit vetus his comœdia, non sine multa
Laude; sed in vitium libertas excidit et vim
Dignam lege regi: lex est accepta chorusque
Turpiter obticuit sublato jure nocendi.
Nil intentatum nostri liquere poëte,
Nec minimum meruere decus, vestigia Graeca
Ausì desere re et celebrare domestica facta,
Vel qui praëtextas vel qui docuere togatas.
Nor would the name of Latium stand renowned
On martial more than on Parnassian ground,
Were not our every bard so loth the while
To brook the pause and labor of the file.
Praise you no piece, my noble friends, but what
Has been through many an hour and many a blot
Corrected, ten times poised in judgment's scale,
And smoothed like sculpture to the critic nail!

Because Democritus thinks fit to call
Art nothing-worth, and genius all in all,
And sternly bids each sober muse's son
Renounce the verdant heights of Helicon,
There are in whom a wondrous whim prevails
Neither to trim their beard nor pare their nails;
Where crowded baths invite, they come not nigh,
But to lone caves and silent deserts fly.
For oh! he shines a bard confessed, be sure,
Whose poll (which three Anticyras could not cure)
To barber Licinus was ne'er consigned!
Fool that I am, who, though to verse inclined,
Purge every spring the wit-inspiring bile!
How matchless, but for this, had been my style!

Nec virtute foret clarisve potentius armis
Quam lingua Latium, si non offenderet unum-
Quemque poetarum limæ labor et mora. Vos, o
Pompilius sanguis, carmen reprehendite, quod non Multa dies et multa litera coercuit atque
Perfectum decies non castigavit ad unguem.

   Ingenium misera quia fortunatius arte
Credit et excludit sanos Helicone poetas
Democritus, bona pars non unguis ponere curat,
Non barbar; secreta petit loca, balnea vitat.
Nanciscetur enim pretium nomenque poetae,
Si tribus Anticyris caput insanabile nunquam
Tonsori Licino commiserit. O ego laevus,
Qui purgor bilem sub verni temporis horam!
No matter; mine be like the whetstone's aid,
Which, blunt itself, lends sharpness to the blade.
While others practise, precept I'll impart,
And, though no artist, prove a friend to art.
Whence all the bard's resources flow, I'll teach;
What his just functions, and how far they reach;
What kindles and what fans the sacred fire;
What course must train him, and what themes inspire;
What breeds the foul, and what the fair befriends;
And whither fitness, whither failure tends.

In the philosophy of man to excel
Is the prime root and spring of writing well.
Matter the page Socratic best can show;
That once provided, words will freely flow.
When lore has opened to the poet's view
To country what, and what to friends is due;—
In what just portion man beneath the names
Of parent, brother, host, affection claims;—
To what the senator, the judge, is bound,
Or chief pavilioned high on tented ground;—
Doubt not but he each character shall scan
And shrewdly fit the manners to the man.

Non alius faceret meliora poemata. Verum
Nil tanti est. Ergo fungar vice cotis, acutum
Reddere quae ferrum valet, exsors ipsa secandi;
Munus et officium, nil scribens ipse, docebo,
Unde parentur opes, quid alat formetque poetam,
Quid deceat, quid non; quo virtus, quo serat error.

Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons:
Rem tibi Socraticæ poterunt ostendere chartæ,
Verbaque provisam rem non invita sequatur.
Qui didicit, patriæ quid debeat et quid amicis,
Quo sit amore parentis, quo frater amandus et hospes,
Quod sit conscripti, quod judicus officium, quæ
Partes in bellum missi ducis, ille profecto
Reddere personæ scit convenientia cuique.
Besides, to copy nature to the life,
Go, mark the world, explore its busy strife;
To living scenes for truth's expression look;
There dip your pen, and make mankind your book.
Oft has the play wherein these virtues dwell,
Set off with sentiment and mannered well,
Though else uncouth and rude in every part,
Devoid of strength, wit, elegance, or art,
More charmed an audience, more their hearts surprised,
Than faithless grace and nonsense harmonized.

Genius to Greece, to Greece the pride of phrase
Heaven gave, of nothing covetous but praise.
Not so our youth, who, cramped by hopeful drilling,
Learn into fifty parts to split one shilling.
Let young Albinus solve the problem sought:
'Take one from five-pence; what results?' — 'A groat.'
'Good! you're the boy to thrive! But come, explain,
If added, what?' — 'A tester.' — 'Good again!'—
Where hearts thus trained to petty self we find,
And rust like this has cankered o'er the mind,
Who'd look for finished poems, wrought with toil,

Respicere exemplar vitæ morumque jubebo
Doctum imitatorem et vivas hinc ducere voces.
Interdum speciosa locis morataque recte
Fabula nullius veneris, sine pondere et arte,
Valdious oblectat populum meliusque moratur
Quam versus inopes rerum nugæque canoræ.

Grais ingenium, Grais dedit ore rotundo
Musa loqui, præter laudem nullius avaris.
Romani pueri longis rationibus assem
Discunt in partes centum diducere. 'Dicat
Filius Albini: Si de quincunce remota est
Uncia, quid superat? Poteras dixisse.' 'Triens.' 'Eu!
Rem poteris servare tuam! Redit uncia, quid fit?'
'Semis.' At hæc animos ærugo et cura peculi
Cum semel imberit, speramus carmina singi

320
325
330
Worthy the cypress case and cedar oil?
To teach — to please — comprise the poet’s views,
Or else at once to profit and amuse.
In precept be concise. What thus is told
The mind shall grasp with ease, with firmness hold;
While all that’s heaped superfluous shocks the taste,
From memory’s tablet fades, and runs to waste.
Let fancy’s wild creation, though designed
Less to improve than to amuse the mind,
Copied at least from nature’s scene appear,
And to a semblance of the truth adhere,
Nor tax the reader’s faith too far, or draw
The breathing infant from the goblin’s maw.
Graybeards will damn what fails in useful truth;
Dry commonplace will pall on buxom youth;
But he who precept with amusement blends,
And charms the fancy while the heart he mends,
Wins every suffrage. Rarely shall he miss
To enrich the Sosi with a piece like this;
Seas shall it traverse, and the writer’s page
Hand down his glories to a distant age.

Posse linenda cedro et levi servanda cupresso?
- Aut prodesse volunt aut delectare poëtae,
  Aut simul et jucunda et idonea dicere vitae.
Quicquid præcipies, esto brevis, ut cito dicta
Percipiant animi dociles teneantque fideles.
Omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat.
Ficta voluptatis causa sinit proxima veris,
Ne quodcunque velit poscat sibi fabula credi,
Neu prænsæ Lamiae vivum puerum extrahat alvo.
Centuriae seniorum agitant expertia frugis;
Celsi praetereunt austera poemata Ramnes:
Omne tulit punctum qui miscuit utile dulci,
Lectorem delectando pariterque monendo;
Hic meret æra liber Sosiis; hic et mare transit
Et longum noto scriptor prorogat ævum.
Yet there occur in almost every book
Specks which the nicest taste must overlook.
For neither always will the minstrel's lyre
Give back the note his ear and hand require;
He asks a grave, the chord a sharp remits;
The archer aims, the bow not always hits.
If then a poem charm me in the main,
Slight faults I'll not too rigidly arraign,
Which frail humanity has here and there
Let fall from oversight or want of care.
To draw the line, then, thus our case will stand:
As that transcriber who, with pen in hand,
Though warned of lapses past, repeats the same,
With no fair plea can parry off the blame;—
As all would flout the lyrist who should ring
Harsh discord always on the selfsame string;—
Such is to me the ever-blundering bard.
He sinks a Chœrillus in my regard,
In whom perceiving haply once awhile
Some casual gleams of wit, I start and smile;
Vexed, on the other hand, if now and then
Short fits of slumber creep on Homer's pen,—

Sunt delicta tamen quibus ignovisse velimus;
Nam neque chorda sonum reddit, quem volt manus et mens,
Poscentique gravem persæpe remittit acutum,
Nec semper feriet quodcumque minabitur arcus. 360
Verum ubi plura nitent in carmine, non ego paucis
Offendar maculis, quas aut incuria fudit,
Aut humana parum cavit natura. Quid ergo est?
Ut scriptor si peccat idem librarius usque,
Quamvis est monitus, venia caret; ut citharœdus 355
Ridetur, chorda qui semper oberrat eadem:
Sic mihi, qui multum cessat, fit Chœrillus ille,
Quem bis terve bonum cum risu mirror; et idem
Indignor quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus.
Howbeit at times the noblest bard, I think,
In works of long attempt may fairly wink.
For poems are like pictures: some appear
Best in the distance, others standing near;
This loves the shade, while that the light endures,
Nor shuns the nicest ken of connoisseurs;
This charms for once, and then the charm is o'er,
While that, the more surveyed, still charms the more.

Hear, elder youth! and mark my maxim well
(Though by a father's lessons you excel
In judgment sound, and all his taste inherit):
A middling worth, a modicum of merit
To certain arts the world may well concede.
In court or chamber, this, perhaps, shall plead,
Short of Messala's skill, his client's cause,
That, short of Aulus' depth, expound the laws,
Yet each of use, each in request may be;
Retained, consulted, each may earn his fee.
But of poetic worth a moderate share
Not men, not gods, not booksellers can bear.

Verum operi longo fas est obreperæ somnum.
Ut pictura, poesis; erit quæ, si proprius stes,
Te capiat magis, et quædam, si longius abstes;
Hæc àmat obscurum; volet hæc sub luce videri,
Judicis argutum quæ non formidat acumen;
Hæc placuit semel, hæc decies repetita placebit.

O major juvenum, quamvis et voce paterna
Fingeris ad rectum et per te sapis, hoc tibi dictum
Tolle memor, certis medium et tolerabile rebus
Recte concedi. Consultus juris et actor
Causarum mediocris abest virtute diserti
Messalæ, nec scit quantum Cascellius Aulus,
Sed tamen in pretio est; mediocribus esse poetis
Non homines, non di, non concessere columnæ.
As music out of tune at festive board,
Seed-cakes of honey from Sardinia stored,
Or unguents void of scent, each guest displease,
Because the feast might well dispense with these;
So verse, whose office and essential end
Is to delight the soul, — unless it tend
To aid, not mar, the purpose of its birth,
Fails in the balance and is nothing-worth.
He that ne'er joined the lists in Mars's field,
Forbears to take up arms he cannot wield;
He that ne'er pitched the quoit nor tossed the ball
Nor whirled the troque, shuns to contend at all,
Fearing the titter of the crowded ring; —
Yet he sings verse who never learned to sing.
'Why not' (says one), 'of knight's estate secure,
Of liberal birth, fair fame, and morals pure?'
Nought e'er will you, I'm sure, in nature's spite,
(Such is your sense and prudence) speak or write.
But, if at some chance hour you aught compose,
See 'tis correct ere to the world it goes;
Submit it first to Tarpa's critic ears,

Ut gratas inter mensas symphonia discors
Et crassum unguentum et Sardo cum melle papaver
Offendunt, poterat duci quia cena sine istis:
Sic animis natum inventumque poema juvandis,
Si paulum summo decessit, vergit ad imum.
Ludere qui nescit, campestribus abstinet armis,
Indoctusque pilæ discive trochive quiescit,
Ne spisse risum tollant impune coronæ;
Qui nescit versus tamen audet fingere. 'Quidni?
Liber et ingenuus, præsertim census equestrem
Summam nummorum, vitioque remotus ab omni.'
Tu nihil invita dices faciesve Minerva;
Id tibi judicium est, ea mens. Si quid tamen olim
Scripseris, in Mæci descendat judicis aures
Your sire's, and mine; and keep your piece nine years.
What is not published you can blot or burn;
But words, once uttered, never can return.

Orpheus of old, Heaven's prophet and high priest,
Drew from their butcherous coil and wildwood feast
Barbarian hordes, hence fabled to assuage
The tiger's ravin and gaunt lion's rage.
Amphion, too, who reared the Theban towers,
Was said by his soft shell's persuasive powers
To heave the marble fragment from its base
And witch the stones at pleasure to their place.
For in those olden times the sage's art
Was but to circumscribe men's rights, and part
Public from private, sacred from profane,
Protect just wedlock, vagrant lust restrain,
Build rampired towns, engrave their laws on wood,
And knit the bands of social brotherhood.
Thus verse seemed Heaven's own gift in times so rude,
And thus high reverence to the bard accrued.
Next Homer rose in epic glory bright;
And bold Tyrtæus roused to martial fight

Et patris et nostras, nonumque prematur in annum,
Membranis intus positis. Delere licebit
Quod non edideris; nescit vox missa reverti.
Silvestres homines sacer interpresque deorum
Caedibus et victu foedo deterruit Orpheus,
Dictus ob hoc lenire tigres rabidosque leones.
Dictus et Amphion Thebanae conditor urbis
Saxa movere sono testudinis et prece blanda
Ducere quo vellet. Fuit hæc sapientia quondam,
Publica privatis secernere, sacra profanis,
Concubitum prohibere vago, dare jura maritis,
Oppida moliri, leges incidere ligno.
Sic honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque
Carminibus venit. Post hos insignis Homerus
Tyrtæusque mares animos in Martia bella
Embattled hosts. In verse were now made known
Fate's high behests, in verse life's duties shown.
By tuneful flatteries every muse's son
The smile of mighty monarchs sought and won;
And verse supplied, at labor's welcome close,
A cheering pastime and a sweet repose.
Thus much, lest haply by a blush you wrong
The choir Pierian and the god of song.
'Tis asked, if this same knack its rise must owe
To plodding art, or from boon nature flow.
To me nor art without rich gifts of mind,
Nor yet mere genius rude and unrefined,
Seems equal to the task. They each require
The aid of each, and must as friends conspire.
He who to Pisa's goal would foremost run,
Much from his youth has suffered, much has done;
Has sweated, shivered, patient to resign
The soul-enfeebling joys of love and wine.
The Pythian piper has been fain to plod
The weary task, and shrunk beneath the rod.
But in this art, forsooth, one needs but say—

Versibus exauit; dictæ per carmina sortes,
Et vite monstrata via est; et gratia regum
Pieriis tentata modis, ludusque repertus
Et longorum operum finis: ne forte pudori
Sit tibi Musa lyræ sollers et cantor Apollo.

Natura fieret laudabile carmen an arte
Quæsitum est: ego nec studium sine divite vena,
Nec rude quid prosit video ingenium; alterius sic
Altera poscit opem res, et conjurat amice.
Qui studet optatam cursu contingere metam,
Multa tuli ingentem fuer, sudavit et alsit,
Abstinuit venere et vino. Qui Pythia cantat
Tibicen, didicit prius extimuitque magistrum.
Nunc satis est dixisse: 'Ego mira poemata pango;
I'm born a poet; blockheads, clear the way!
Plague take the hindmost! Genius scorns to own
Dull precept's aid, or what's unlearnt unknown.'

As some sly mountebank with trumpet loud
To buy his wares invites a gaping crowd,
So would-be poets, rich in purse and land,
Tempt with fine pennyworths the flattering band.
Is there a scribbler who can well afford
With luscious cates to crown a smoking board,
Can bail the wretch whose credit flags, and draw
The foot of beggary from the noose of law,
'Twere passing strange if such a coxcomb knew
The difference 'twixt a false friend and a true.
Be then advised; and — does the varlet live
To whom you aught have given or mean to give,
Brimful of gratitude for favors past,
With hopes those favors shall not prove the last —
Him, when to friends you would some piece rehearse,
Ask not to sit in judgment on your verse.
For 'good! rare! charming!' will be all his cry,
While tears of transport trickle from his eye;
Anon enraptured from his seat he'll bound,

Occupet extremum scabies; mihi turpe relinqui est
Et quod non didici sane nescire fateri.'
Ut præco, ad merces turbam qui cogit emendas,
Assentatores jubet ad lucrum ire poeta
Dives agris, dives positis in fenore nummis.
Si vero est unctum qui recte ponere possit,
Et spondere levi pro paupere, et eripere atris
Litibus implicitum, mirabor, si sciet inter-
Noscere mendacem verumque beatus amicum.
Tu seu donaris, seu quid donare voles cui,
Nolito ad versus tibi factos ducere plenum
Laetitiae; clamabit enim 'Pulchre! bene! recte!'
Pallescet super his, etiam stillabit amicis
Change color, clap his hands, and stamp the ground.
As with hired mummers in a funeral train,
Who feel the grief rant less than those who feign;
So will the laugher-in-his-sleeve appear
More moved than one whose praises are sincere.
Wise kings, 'tis said, who prudently intend
'To prove the courtier ere they call him friend,
Ply him with copious bumpers, till the bowl
Has gently wrung each secret from the soul.
Bards! watch your critics, lest a borrowed skin
With specious covering mask the fox within.

If to Quintilius you recited aught,
'Pray change,' he'd say, 'this word; retouch that thought.'
If you protested that the passage penned
You twice or thrice had toiled in vain to mend,
'Blot out then,' he'd reply, 'the ill-wrought strain!
Back to the anvil with this trash again!'
If you choose rather to dispute his taste
Than mend your piece, no further would he waste
Or time or pains, but leave you to admire
Yourself and doggerel to your heart's desire.

Ex oculis rorem, saliet, tundet pede terram.
Ut qui conducti plorant in funere, dicunt
Et faciunt prope plura dolentibus ex animo, sic
Derisor vero plus laudatore movetur.
Reges dicuntur multis urgere culullis
Et torquere mero quem perspexisse laborant,
An sit amicitia dignus: si carmina condes,
Nunquam te fallant animi sub volpe latentes.

Quintilio si quid recitares, 'Corrige sodes
Hoc,' aiebat, 'et hoc; ' melius te posse negares
Bis terque expertum frustra, delere jubebat
Et male tornatos incudi reddere versus.
Si defendere delictum quam vertere malles,
Nullum ultra verbum aut operam insumebat inanem,
Quin sine rivali teque et tua solus amares.
The genuine critic will with honest zeal,
Feigning no raptures which he does not feel,
Trim all redundant ornament away,
On the obscure let in a lucid ray,
Blot the ambiguous, blame the loosely penned,
And prove the Aristarchus in the friend.
Nor will he say — ‘Why rudely should I tease
The friend I love for trifles such as these?’
For know, these trifles, while you lack the will
To speak plain truth, oft lead to serious ill,
As to his cost that friend erelong shall own,
When made the butt and byword of the town.

As the lorn wretch whom leprous scabs devour
Or jaundice gilds, one by Diana’s power
Moon-stricken, or by Pan convulsed with fits,
Such is the poet who has lost his wits.
The wise all shun him, while a heedless throng
Hoot at his heels where’er he prowls along.
Bellowing his verse with head upreared, his eye
‘Rolling in frenzy fine’ from earth to sky,
If (like a fowler on his feathered prey

Vir bonus et prudens versus reprehendet inertes,
Culpabit duros, incomptis adlinet atrum
Transverso calamo signum, ambitiosa recidet
Ornamenta, parum claris lucem dare coget,
Arguit ambigue dictum, mutanda notabit,
Fiet Aristarchus; non dicet, ‘Cur ego amicum
Offendam in nugis?’ Hæ nugæ seria ducent
In mala derisum semel exceptumque sinistre.

Ut mala quem scabies aut morbus regius urget,
Aut fanaticus error et iracunda Diana,
Vesanum tetigisse timent fugiuntque poetam
Qui sapiunt; agitant pueri incautique sequuntur.
Hic, dum sublimis versus ructatur et errat,
Si veluti merulis intentus decidit auceps
Intent) he chance to encounter in his way
Some ditch or pit, he long enough may shout
‘Help, neighbors, ho!’ — for none will haul him out.
But, were there some whom pity moved to fetch
A rope and drag to life the crack-brained wretch,
‘Hold, sirs!’ I’d cry. ‘For aught that you can tell,
The madcap plunged on purpose in this well,
And wishes not to live.’ Anon the fate
Of Sicily’s famed poet I’d relate:
‘Empedocles with lore celestial fraught,
A deathless god aspiring to be thought,
Leaped into fiery Ætna in cold blood.—
These bards are licensed (be it understood)
To perish as they list. Against his will
To save a soul were barbarous as to kill.
Nor is it his first freak; and, were it crossed
By your kind zeal, ’twere still but labor lost;
He’d soon relapse, soon play the same mad game,
And by self-slaughter seek a deathless name.
Nor is it altogether clear, why first
His bosom with this scribbling itch was cursed.
Who knows but vengeance bade him thus atone

In puteum foveamve; licet ‘Succurrere’ longum
Clamet, ‘Io cives!’ non sit qui tollere curet. 460
Si curet quis opem ferre et demittere funem,
‘Qui scis an prudens huc se projecerit atque
Servari nolit?’ dicam, Siculique poëtae
Narrabo interitum. ‘Deus immortalis haberis
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Ætnam
Insiluit. Sit jus liceatque perire poetis;
Invitum qui servat, idem facit occidenti.
Nec semel hoc fecit, nec, si retractus erit, jam
Fiet homo et ponet famosae mortis amorem.
Nec satis apparet, cur versus factitet; utrum
Minxerit in patrios cineres, et triste bidental
Sins of deep dye? who knows but he has thrown
Some dread ‘bidental’ from its hallowed base,
Or to a father’s ashes done disgrace?
One thing is plain: he has his fits of rage,
And then, as if some bear had burst its cage,
With loathsome recitation puts to flight
Learnèd and simple. Woe betides the wight,
Who meets his clutch at that unlucky time,—
Him will he read to death and stun with rime;
A very leech that drains our vital flood,
Nor quits his ruthless hold till gorged with blood!

Moverit incestus: certe furt, ac velut ursus
Objectos caveæ valuit si frangere clathros,
Indoctum doctumque fugat recitator acerbus;
Quem vero arripuit, tenet occiditque legendo,
Non missura cutem, nisi plena cruoris, hirudo.'
VIDA.
VIDA'S ART OF POETRY,
WITH THE TRANSLATION BY PITT.

BOOK I.

GIVE me, ye sacred Muses, to impart
The hidden secrets of your tuneful art;
Give me your awful mysteries to sing,
Unlock and open wide your sacred spring;
While from his infancy the bard I lead
And set him on your mountain's lofty head,
Direct his course, and point him out the road
To sing in epic strains a hero or a god.

What youth, whose generous bosom pants for praise,
Will dare with me to beat those arduous ways,
O'er high Parnassus' painful steeps to go,
And leave the groveling multitude below,—
Where the glad Muses sing and form the choir,
Where bright Apollo strikes the silver lyre?

SIT fas vestra mihi vulgare arcana per orbe,
Pierides, penitusque sacros recludere fontes,
Dum vatem egregium teneris educere ab annis,
Heroum qui facta canat, laudesve Deorum,
Mente agito, vestrique in vertice sistere montis.

Ecquis erit juvenum, segni qui plebe relictas
Sub pedibus, pulchræ laudis succensus amore,
Ausit inaccessæ mecum se credere rupi,
Lætæ ubi Pierides, cithara dum pulcher Apollo
Personat, indulgent choreis, et carmina dicunt?
Approach thou first, great Francis, nor refuse
To pay due honors to the sacred Muse;
While Gallia waits for thy auspicious reign,
Till age completes the monarch in the man.
Meantime the Muse may bring some small relief,
To charm thy anguish and suspend thy grief,
While guilty fortune's stern decrees detain
Thee and thy brother in the realms of Spain,
Far, far transported from your native place,
Your country's, father's, and your friends' embrace!
Such are the terms the cruel fates impose
On your great father, struggling with his woes,
Such are their hard conditions: — they require
The sons to purchase and redeem the sire.
But yet, brave youth, from grief, from tears, abstain,
Fate may relent and Heaven grow mild again;
At last, perhaps, the glorious day may come,
The day that brings our royal exile home;
When, to thy native realms in peace restored,
The ravished crowds shall hail their passing lord;
When each transported city shall rejoice,
And nations bless thee with a public voice;

Primus ades, Francisce, sacras ne despicet Musas,
Regia progenies, cui regum debita sceptrum
Gallorum, cum firma annis accesserit ætas.
Hæc tibi parva ferunt jam nunc solatia dulces,
Dum procul a patria raptum, amplexuque tuorum,
Ah dolor! Hispanis sors impia detinet oris,
Henrico cum fratres. Patris sic fata tulerunt
Magnanimi, dum fortuna luctatur iniqua!
Parce tamen puer o lachrymis; fata aspera forsan
Mitescent, aderitque dies lætissima tandem,
Post triste exilium, patriis cum redditus oris,
Lætitiam ingentem populorum, omnesque per urbes
Accipies plausus, et lætas undique voces,
To the thronged fanes the matrons shall repair;
Absolve their vows, and breathe their souls in prayer.
Till then, let every Muse engage thy love,
With me at large o'er high Parnassus rove,
Range every bower, and sport in every grove.

First then observe, that verse is ne'er confined
To one fixed measure or determined kind,
Though at its birth it sung the gods alone,
And then religion claimed it for her own,
In sacred strains addressed the deity,
And spoke a language worthy of the sky.
New themes succeeding bards began to choose,
And in a wider field engaged the Muse —
The common bulk of subjects to rehearse
In all the rich varieties of verse.
Yet none of all with equal honors shine
(But those which celebrate the Power Divine)
To those exalted measures, which declare
The deeds of heroes and the sons of war;
From hence posterity the name bestowed
On this rich present of the Delphic god;
Fame says, Phemonoe in this measure gave

Votaque pro reditu persolvent debita matres.
Interea te Pierides comitentur; in altos
Jam te Parnassi mecum aude attollere luocos.
Jamque adeo in primis ne te non carminis unum
Prætereat genus esse, licet celebranda reperti
Ad sacra sint tantum versus, laudesve Deorum
Dicendas, ne relligio sine honore jaceret;
Nam traxere etiam paulatim ad cætera Musas,
Versibus et variis cecinerunt omnia vates.
Sed nullum e numero carmen præstantius omni,
Quam quo, post Divos, heroum facta recensent,
Versibus unde etiam nomen fecere minores.
Munere concessum Phœbi venerabile donum
Apollo's answers from the Pythian cave.
   But ere you write, consult your strength, and choose
A theme proportioned justly to your Muse.
For though in chief these precepts are bestowed
On him who sings a hero or a god,
To other themes their general use extends,
And serves in different views to different ends.
Whether the lofty Muse, with tragic rage,
Would proudly stalk in buskins on the stage;
Or in soft elegies our pity move,
And show the youth in all the flames of love;
Or sing the shepherd's woes in humble strains,
And the low humors of contending swains;
These faithful rules shall guide the bard along
In every measure, argument, and song.

Be sure, whatever you propose to write,
Let the chief motive be your own delight
And well-weighed choice. A task enjoined refuse,
Unless a monarch should command your Muse

Phemnoes, quae prima dedit, si vera vetustas,
Ex adyto haud alius numeris responsa per orbem.
   Tu vero ipse humeros explorans consule primum,
Atque tuis prudentis genus elige viribus aptum.
   Nam licet hic Divos, ac Diis genitos heroas
In primis doceam canere, et res dicere gestas,
Hæc tamen interdum mea te præcepta juvabunt,
Seu scenam ingrediens populo spectacula præbes,
Sive elegis juvenum lachrymas quibus igne medullas
   Urit amor, seu pastorum de more querelas
Et lites Siculi vatis modularis avena;
Sive aliud quodcunque canis, quo carmine cunque,
Nunquam hinc, ne dubita, prorsum inconsultus abibis.
   Atque ideo quodcunque audes, quodcunque paratus
Aggrederis, tibi sit placitum, atque arriserit ultro
Ante animo; nec jussa canas, nisi forte coactus
Magnorum imperio regum, siquis tamen usquam est
(If we may hope those golden times to see,
When bards become the care of majesty).
Free and spontaneous the smooth numbers glide,
Where choice determines and our wills preside;
But, at command, we toil with fruitless pain,
And drag the involuntary load in vain.

Nor, at its birth, indulge your warm desire,
On the first glimmering of the sacred fire;
Defer the mighty task, and weigh your power,
And every part in every view explore;
And let the theme in different prospects roll
Deep in your thoughts, and grow into the soul.

But ere with sails unfurled you fly away,
And cleave the bosom of the boundless sea,
A fund of words and images prepare,
And lay the bright materials up with care,
Which, at due time, occasion may produce,
All ranged in order for the poet's use.
Some happy objects by mere chance are brought
From hidden causes to the wandering thought,

Primores inter nostros qui talia curet.
Omnia sponte sua, quae nos elegimus ipsi,
Proveniunt, duro assequimur vix jussa labore.

   Sed neque cum primum tibi mentem inopina cupido,
   Atque repens calor attigerit, subito aggradiendum est
   Magnum opus; adde moram, tecumque impensius ante
   Consule, quicquid id est, partesque expende per omnes
   Mente diu versans, donec nova cura senescat.

   Ante etiam pelago quam pandas vela patenti,
   Incumbasque operi incipientis, tibi digna supellex
   Verborum rerumque paranda est, proque videnda
   Instant multa prius, quorum vatum indiget usus;
   Illis tempus erit mox cum letabere partis.
   Sponte sua, dum forte etiam nil tale putamus,
   In mentem quaedam veniunt, quae forsitan, ultro
VIDA'S ART OF POETRY.

Which, if once lost, you labor long in vain
To catch the ideal fugitives again.
Nor must I fail their conduct to extol,
Who, when they lay the basis of the whole,
Explore the ancients with a watchful eye,
Lay all their charms and elegancies by,
Then to their use the precious spoils apply.

At first without the least restraint compose,
And mold the future poem into prose,
A full and proper series to maintain,
And draw the just connection in a chain,
By stated bounds your progress to control,
To join the parts, and regulate the whole.

And now 'tis time to spread the opening sails
Wide to the wanton winds and flattering gales;
'Tis time we now prescribe the genuine laws
To raise the beauteous fabric with applause;
But first some method requisite appears
To form the boy, and mold his tender years.
In vain the bard the sacred wreath pursues,

Si semel exciderint, nunquam revocata redibunt,
Atque eadem studio frustra expectabis inani.
Nec mihi non placeant, qui, fundamenta laborum
Cum jaciunt, veterum explorant opera inclyta vatum
Noctes atque dies, passimque accommoda cogunt
Auxilia, intentique aciem per cuncta voluntant.

Quin etiam prius effigiem formare solutis
Totiusque operis simulachrum fingere verbis
Proderit, atque omnes ex ordine nectere partes,
Et seriem rerum, et certos tibi ponere fines,
Per quos tuta regens vestigia tendere pergas.

Jamque hic tempus erat dare vela vocantibus Euris,
Condendique operis primas præscribere leges:
At prius ætati teneræ quæ cura coelendæ
Dicendum, quantus puero labor impendendus.
Unless trained up and seasoned to the Muse.
Soon as the prattling innocent shall reach
To the first use and rudiments of speech,
Even then by Helicon he ought to rove,
Even then the tuneful Nine should win his love
By just degrees. — But make his guide your choice
For his chaste phrase and elegance of voice,
That he at first successfully may teach
The methods, laws, and discipline of speech;
Lest the young charge, mistaking right and wrong,
With vicious habits prejudice his tongue,
Habits, whose subtle seeds may mock your art,
And spread their roots and poison through his heart.
Whence none shall move me to approve the wretch,
Who, wildly borne above the vulgar reach,
And big with vain pretences to impart
Vast shows of learning and a depth of art,
For sense the impertinence of terms affords,
An idle cant of formidable words,
The pride of pedants, the delight of fools,

Nulli etenim insignem dabitur gestare coronam,
Pieridum choreas teneris nisi norit ab annis.
Postquam igitur primas fandi puer hauserit artes,
Jam tunc incipiatur riguos accedere fontes,
Et Phoebum, et dulces Musas assuescat amare.
Ille autem parvum qui primis artibus ante
Imbuit, atque modos docuit legesque loquendi,
Sincerus vocis, cuperem, ac purissimus oris
Contigerit, sandi ne fors puer atque nefandi
Nescius imbiberit male grate semina linguæ,
Quæ post infecto ex animo radicitus ulla
Non valeas, meliora docens, evellere cura.
Idcirco mihi ne quisquam persuadeat oro,
Ut placeant qui (dum cupiunt se numine lævo
Tollere humo, et penitus jactant se ignota docere)
The vile disgrace and lumber of the schools.
In vain the circling youths, a blooming throng,
Dwell on the eternal jargon of his tongue;
Deluded fools! The same is their mistake,
Who at the limpid stream their thirst may slake,
Yet choose the tainted waters of the lake.
Let no such pest approach the blooming care,
Deprave his style, and violate his ear;
But far, oh far, to some remoter place
Drive the vile wretch to teach a barbarous race!

Now to the Muse's stream the pupil bring,
To drink large draughts of the Pierian spring,
And from his birth the sacred bard adore
Nursed by the Nine on Mincio's flowery shore,
And ask the gods his numbers to inspire
With like invention, majesty, and fire.
He reads Ascanius' deeds with equal flame,
And longs with him to run at nobler game.

Conventu in medio, septique impube corona,
Insolito penitus fandi de more magistri,
Obscuras gaudent in vulgum spargere voces
Irrisī, sēdam illuviem, atque immania monstra.
Non minus a rectæ mentis ratione feruntur
Decepti, quam qui, liquidi cum pocula fontes
Sufficiant, malunt grave-olentem haurire paludem.
Ne mihi, ne teneræ talis se admovert auri,
Sed procul o procul ista ferat, natosque Getarum
Imbuat, aut si qua est gens toto obtusior orbe.
Jamque igitur mea cura puer penetralia vatum
Ingrediatur, et Aonia se prolatuat unda:
Jamque sacrum teneris vatem veneretur ab annis,
Quem Musæ Minci herbosis aluere sub anris,
Atque olim similem poscat sibi numina versum,
Admirans artem, admirans preclara reperta.
Nec mora, jam favet Ascanio, tactusque dolore
Impubes legit æquales, quos impius huisit.
For youths of ages past he makes his moan,
And learns to pity years so like his own,
Which with too swift and too severe a doom
The fate of war had hurried to the tomb.
His eyes for Pallas and for Lausus flow,
Mourn with their sires, and weep another's woe.
But when Euryalus, in all his charms,
Is snatched by fate from his dear mother's arms,
And, as he rolls in death, the purple flood
Streams out, and stains his snowy limbs with blood,
His soul the pangs of generous sorrow pierce,
And a new tear steals out at every verse.
Meantime with bolder steps the youth proceeds,
And the Greek poets in succession reads;
Seasons to either tongue his tender ears;
Compares the heroes' glorious characters;
Sees how Aeneas is himself alone,
The draft of Peleus' and Laertes' son,
How by the poet's art 'in one conspire
Ulysses' conduct and Achilles' fire.

But now, young bard, with strict attention hear,

Ante diem Mavors, et acerbo funere mersit.
Multa super Lauso, super et Pallante perempto
Multa rogat, lachrymas inter quoque singula fundit
Carmina, crudeli cum raptum morte parenti
Ah! miseræ legit Euryalam, pulchrosque per artus
Purpureum, letum dum volvitur, ire cruorem.
Nec non interea Graios accedere vates
Audeat, et linguam teneris assuescat utramque
Auribus, exercens nunc hanc, nunc impiger illam.
Nulla mora est, nostro Aeneæ jam conferet igneis
Æaciden flagrantem animis, Ithacumque vagantem,
Atque ambos sæpe impellet concurrere vates.
Nunc geminas, puer, huc aures, huc dirige mentem.
Nam, quia non paucos parte ex utraque poetas
And drink my precepts in at either ear;
Since mighty crowds of poets you may find,
Crowds of the Grecian and Ausonian kind,
Learn hence what bards to quit or to pursue,
To shun the false, and to embrace the true.
Nor is it hard to cull each noble piece,
And point out every glorious son of Greece,
Above whose numbers Homer sits on high,
And shines supreme in distant majesty;
Whom with a reverent eye the rest regard,
And owe their raptures to the sovereign bard;
Through him the god their panting souls inspires,
Swells every breast, and warms with all his fires.
Blest were the poets, with the hallowed rage,
Trained up in that and the succeeding age;
As to his time each poet nearer drew
His spreading fame in just proportion grew;
By like degrees the next degenerate race
Sunk from the height of honor to disgrace.
And now the fame of Greece extinguished lies,
Her ancient language with her glory dies;
Her banished princes mourn their ravished crowns,

Nostrosque, Graiosque tibi se offerre videbis,
Quos hic evites, quibus idem sidera tutus
Evaletas, dicam, ne quis te fallere possit.
Haud multus labor autores tibi prodere Graios,
Quos inter potitur sceptris insignis Homerus:
Hunc omnes alii observant, hinc pectore numen
Concipiunt vates, blandumque Heliconis amorem.
Felices quos illa ætas, quos protulit illi
Proxima. Divino quanto quisque ortus Homero
Vicinus magis, est tanto prestantior omnis.
Degenerant adeo magis ac magis usque minores,
Obliti veterum præclara inventa parentum.
Jamque fere Inachiae restincta est gloria linguæ
Driven from their old hereditary thrones;
Her drooping natives rove o'er worlds unknown,
And weep their woes in regions not their own;
She feels through all her states the dreadful blow,
And mourns the fury of a barbarous foe.

But when our bards brought o'er the Aonian maids
From their own Helicon to Tiber's shades,
When first they settled on Hesperia's plains,
Their numbers ran in rough unpolished strains;
Void of the Grecian art their measures flowed,
Pleased the wild satyrs and the sylvan crowd.
Low shrubs and lofty forests whilom rung
With uncouth verse and antiquated song;
Nor yet old Ennius sung in artless strains,
Fights, arms, and hosts embattled on the plains,
Who first aspired to pluck the verdant crown
From Grecian heads, and fix it on his own.
New wonders the succeeding bards explore,
Which slept concealed in Nature's womb before:
Her awful secrets the bold poet sings,

Omnis, et Argolici jussi concedere avitis
Sunt pulsi reges soliiis, civesque coacti
Diversa exilia, atque alienas querere terras.
Huc illuc inopes errant: habet omnia victor
Barbarus, et versis nunc luget Græcia fatis.

Nostri autem, ut sanctum Divas Helicona colentes
Ceperunt primum in Latium transferre, fluebant
Versu incomposito informes, artisque Pelasgae
Indociles Musa fundebant carmina agresti,
Sylvicolas inter Faunos: tunc omne sonabat
Arbustum fremitu sylvai frondosai.
Nondum acies, nondum arma rudi pater Ennius ore
Tentarat, qui mox Graio de vertice primus
Est ausus viridem in Latio sperare coronam.
Tum rerum causas, naturæ arcana, latentes
And sets to view the principles of things;
Each part was fair, and beautiful the whole,
And every line was nectar to the soul.
By such degrees the verse, as ages rolled,
Was stamped to form, and took the beauteous mold;
Ausonia's bards drew off from every part
The barbarous dregs, and civilized the art;
Till, like the day, all shining and serene,
That drives the clouds and clears the gloomy scene,
Refines the air and brightens up the skies,
See the majestic head of Virgil rise,
Phœbus' undoubted son! — who clears the rust
Of the rough ancients, and shakes off their dust.
He on each line a nobler grace bestowed;
He thought and spoke in every word a god.
To grace this mighty bard, ye Muses, bring
Your choicest flowers, and rife all the spring.
See how the Grecian bards, at distance thrown,
With reverence bow to this distinguished son!
Immortal sounds his golden lines impart,
And naught can match his genius but his art;

Explorare ausi, cecinerunt carmine dulci,
Omnia Pierio spargentes nectare vates.
Atque ita deinde rudes paulatim sumere versus
Cœperunt formam insignem, penitusque Latini
Agrestem exuerunt morem, liquidissima donec
Tempestas veluti cæli post nubila, et imbres,
Extulit os sacram, soboles certissima Phœbi,
Virgilius, qui mox, veterum squalore situque
Deterso, in melius mira omnia rettulit arte,
Vocem animunque Deo similis: date lilia plenis,
Pierides, calathis, tantoque assurgite alunno!
Unus hic ingenio præstanti gentis Achivæ
Divinos vates longe superavit, et arte,
Aureus! immortale sonans! stupet ipsa, pavetque,
Even Greece turns pale and trembles at his fame,
Which shades the lustre of her Homer's name.
'Twas then Ausonia saw her language rise
In all its strength and glory to the skies;
Such glory never could she boast before,
Nor could succeeding poets make it more.
From that blest period the poetic state
Ran down the precipice of time and fate;
Degenerate souls succeed, a wretched train,
And her old fame at once drew back again.
One to his genius trusts in every part,
And scorns the rules and discipline of art,
While this an empty tide of sound affords,
And roars and thunders in a storm of words.
Some, musically dull, all methods try
To win the ear with sweet stupidity,
Unruffled strains for solid wit dispense,
And give us numbers when we call for sense.
Till, from the Hesperian plains and Tiber chased,
From Rome the banished Sisters fled at last,
Driven by the barbarous nations, who from far

Quamvis ingentem miretur Græcia Homerum.
Haud alio Latium tantum se tempore jactat:
Tunc linguae Ausoniae potuit qua maxima virtus
Esse, fuit; coeloque ingens se gloria vexit
Italix: sperare nefas sit vatibus ultra.
Nulla mora, ex illo in pejus ruere omnia visa,
Degenerare animi, atque retro res lapsa referri.
Hic namque ingenio confitus posthabet artem:
Ille furit strepitu, tenditque æquare tubarum
Voce sonos, versusque tonat sine more per omnes;
Dant alii cantus vacuos, et inania verba
Incassum, sola capi dulcedine vocis;
Pierides donec Romam, et Tyberina fluenta
Deseruere, Italis expulsæ protinus oris.
Burst into Latium with a tide of war.
Hence a vast change of their old manners sprung,
The slaves were forced to speak their master's tongue;
No honors now were paid the sacred Muse,
But all were bent on mercenary views;
Till Latium saw with joy the Aonian train
By the great Medici restored again.
The illustrious Medici, of Tuscan race,
Were born to cherish learning in disgrace,
New life on every science to bestow,
And lull the cries of Europe in her woe.
With pity they beheld those turns of fate,
And propped the ruins of the Grecian state;
For, lest her wit should perish with her fame,
Their care supported still the Argive name.
They called the aspiring youths from distant parts,
To plant Ausonia with the Grecian arts;
To bask in ease, and science to diffuse,
And to restore the empire of the Muse.
They sent to ravaged provinces with care,

Tanti causa mali Latio gens aspera aperto
Sæpius irrupens: sunt jussi vertere morem
Ausonidæ victi, victoris vocibus usi
Cessit amor Musarum; artes subiere repente
Indignæ, atque opibus cuncti incubuere paradis.
Jampridem tamen Ausonios invisere rursus
Ceperunt, Medicum revocatæ munere, Muse;
Tuscorum Medicum, quos tandem protulit ætas
Europæ in tantis solamen dulce ruinis.
Illi etiam, Graœ miserati incommoda gentis,
Ne Danaum penitus caderet cum nomine virtus,
In Latium advectos juvenes, juvenumque magistros,
Argolicas artes quibus esset cura tueri,
Securos Musas jussere, atque otia amare.
Illi etiam captas late misere per urbes,
And cities wasted by the rage of war,
To buy the ancients’ works, of deathless fame,
And snatch the immortal labors from the flame
To which the foes had doomed each glorious piece,
Who reign and lord it in the realms of Greece;
(But we, ye gods, would raise a foreign lord,
As yet untaught to sheathe the civil sword!).
Through many a period this has been the fate,
And this the list of the poetic state.

Hence sacred Virgil from thy soul adore
Above the rest, and to thy utmost power
Pursue the glorious paths he struck before.
If he supplies not all your wants, peruse
The immortal strains of each Augustan Muse.
There stop — nor rashly seek to know the rest,
But drive the dire ambition from thy breast
Till riper years and judgment form thy thoughts
To mark their beauties and avoid their faults.

Meantime, ye parents, with attention hear,
And, thus advised, exert your utmost care:

Qui doctas tabulas, veterum monumenta virorum,
Mercati pretio advosherent, quae barbarus igni
Tradebat, Danaum regnis opibusque potitus.
Et tentamus adhuc sceptris imponere nostris
Externum, necdum civiles condimus enses!
Hae ætas omnis, vatum hæc fortuna priorum.

Ergo ipsum ante alios animo venerare Maronem,
Atque unum sequere, utque potes, vestigia serva.
Qui si forte tibi non omnia sufficit unus,
Adde illi natos eodem quoque tempore vates.
Parce dehinc, puer, atque alios ne quare doceri;
Nec te discendi capiat tam dira cupidio.
Tempus erit, tibi mox cum firma advenerit ætas,
Spectatum ut cunctos impune accedere detur.

Interea’moniti vos hic audite, parentes.
Quærendus rector de millibus, eque legendus,
The blameless tutor from a thousand choose,
One from his soul devoted to the Muse;
Who, pleased the tender pupil to improve,
Regards and loves him with a father's love.
Youth, of itself to numerous ills betrayed,
Requires a prop, and wants a foreign aid;
Unless a master's rules his mind incline
To love and cultivate the sacred Nine,
His thoughts a thousand objects will employ,
And from Parnassus lead the wandering boy.
So trusts the swain the saplings to the earth,
So hopes in time to see the sprouting birth;
Against the winds defensive props he forms,
To shield the future forest from the storms,
That each emboldened plant at length may rise
In verdant pride, and shoot into the skies.

But let the guide, if e'er he would improve
His charge, avoid his hate and win his love,
Lest in his rage wrong measures he may take,

Sicubi Musarum studiis insignis, et arte,
Qui curas dulces, carique parentis amorem
Induat, atque velit blandum perferre laborem.

Illecebræ sacris avertant mille Camænis,
Deceptum falsa melioris imagine curæ.

Ille autem, puere cu cui sed duce cura colendi
Artibus egregiis, in primis optet amari,
Atque odium cari super omnia vitet alumni:
And loathe the Muses for the teacher's sake.
His soul then slackened from her native force,
Flags at the barrier and forgets the course.
Nor by your anger be the youth o'erawed;
But scorn the ungenerous province of the rod;
The offended Muses never can sustain
To hear the shriekings of the tender train,
But, stung with grief and anguish, hang behind.
Damped is the sprightly vigor of the mind;
The boy no daring images inspire,
No bright ideas set his thoughts on fire;
He drags on heavily the ungrateful load,
Grown obstinately dull, and seasoned to the rod.

I know a pedant, who to penance brought
His trembling pupils for the lightest fault,
His soul transported with a storm of ire,
And all the rage that malice could inspire;
By turns the torturing scourges we might hear,
By turns the shrieks of wretches stunned the ear.
Still to my mind the dire ideas rise,

Ne forte et sacras simul oderit ille Camenas
Imprudens, et adhuc tantae dulcedinis expers;
Deficientque animi studiorum in limine primo.
Ponite crudeles iras et flagra, magistri,
Foeda ministeria, atque minis absistite acerbis.
Ne mihi ne, quæso, puerum quis verbera cogat
Dura pati; neque enim lachrymas, aut dulcis alumni
Ferre queunt Musæ gemitus, ægræque recedunt;
Illiusque cadunt animi, nec jam amplius audet
Sponte sua quicquam egregium, ingratumque laborem
Invitus trahit ægere, animoque ad verbera durat.

Vidi ego, qui semper levia ob commissa vocabat
Ad pænam pueros, furiis insurgere, et ira
Terribilem, invisos veluti sæviret in hostes;
Hinc semper gemitus, hinc verbera dira sonabant.
Atque equidem memini, cum formidatus iniquis
When rage unusual sparkled in his eyes;
When with the dreadful scourge insulting loud,
The tyrant terrified the blooming crowd.
A boy, the fairest of the frightened train,
Who yet scarce gave the promise of a man,
Ah dismal object! idly passed the day
In all the thoughtless innocence of play;
When lo! the imperious wretch, inflamed with rage,
Fierce, and regardless of his tender age,
With fury storms; the fault his clamors urge;
His hand high-waving brandishes the scourge;
Tears, vows, and prayers, the tyrant’s ears assail,
In vain; nor tears, nor vows, nor prayers, prevail.
The trembling innocent from deep despair
Sickened, and breathed his little soul in air.
For him beneath, his poplar mourns the Po,
For him the tears of hoary Serius flow,
For him their tears the watery sisters shed,
Who loved him living, and deplored him dead!
The furious pedant, to restrain his rage,
Should mark the example of a former age,

Urgeret pœnis, solitoque immanior ille
Terreret turbam invalidam, (miserabile visu!)
Forte puer prima signans nondum ora juventa,
Insignis facie ante alios, exegerat omnem
Cum sociis ludens lucem, oblitusque timoris
Posthabuit ludo jussos ediscere versus.
Ecce! furens animis multa increpat ille, minisque
Insurgens sævo pavitatem territat ore
Horrendum, et loris dextram crudelibus armat.
Quo subito terrore puer miserabilis acri
Corripitur morbo; parvo is post tempore vitam
Crescentem blandæ celi sub luce reliquit.
Illum populi fer Padus, illum Serius imis
Seriadesque diu Nymphæ flevere sub undis.
Tempore jam ex illo, vatem cum dura jubentem
How fierce Alcides, warmed with youthful ire,
Dashed on his master's front his vocal lyre.
But yet, ye youths, confess your masters' sway,
And their commands implicitly obey.

Whoever then this arduous task pursues,
To form the bard and cultivate the Muse,
Let him by softer means and milder ways,
Warm his ambition with the love of praise.
Soon as his precepts shall engage his heart,
And fan the rising fire in every part,
Light is the task; for then the eager boy
Pursues the voluntary toil with joy,
Disdains the inglorious indolence of rest,
And feeds the immortal ardor in his breast.

And here the common practice of the schools
By known experience justifies my rules,
The youths in social studies to engage;
For then the rivals burn with generous rage,
Each soul the stings of emulation raise,
And every little bosom beats for praise.

Phœbigenam Alcides animo indignante peremit,
Vocali invisam seriams testudine frontem,
Debuerat sævos factum monuisse magistros.
Vos tamen, o jussi juvenes, parete regentum
Imperiis, ultroque animos summittite vestros.

Siquem igitur clari formandi gloria vatis
Digna manet, verbis puerum compellat amicis,
Sæpe rogans, laudisque animum pertentat amore.
Quandoquidem hunc imis postquam semel ossibus ignem
Implicuit, labor inde levis; sese excitat ardens
Sponte sua, durosque volens fert ille labores,
Et tacito vivens crescit sub pectore flamma.

Quid memorem? socium nam mos æqualibus annis
Jungere, cui paribus studiis contendat alumnus,
Æmula cum virtus stimuliis agitari honestis:
Præsertim si victori sua præmia rector
But gifts proposed will urge them best to rise;
Fired at the glorious prospect of a prize,
With noble jealousy the blooming bard
Reads, labors, glows, and strains for the reward,
Fears lest his happy rival win the race,
And raise a triumph on his own disgrace.

But when once seasoned to the rage divine,
He loves and courts the raptures of the Nine,
The sense of glory, and the love of fame,
Serve but as second motives to the flame;
The thrilling pleasure all the bard subdues,
Locked in the strict embraces of the Muse.
See! when harsh parents force the youth to quit,
For meaner arts, the dear delights of wit,
If e’er the wonted warmth his thoughts inspire,
And with past pleasures set his mind on fire,
How from his soul he longs, but longs in vain,
To haunt the groves and purling streams again;
No stern commands of parents can control,
No force can check the sallies of his soul.

Pollicitus, celeremve canem, pictamve pharetram.
Continuo videas studio gesture legendi
Ardentem, ac sera sub nocte urgere laborem,
Dum timet alterius capiti spectare coronam.

Ast ubi sponte sua studia hæc assuerit amare,
Jam non laudis amor, non illum gloria tantum
Sollicitat, sed mira operum dulcedine captus
Musarum nequit avelli complexibus arctis.
Nonne vides, duri natos ubi sepe parentes
Dulcibus amorunt studiis, et discere avaras
Jusserunt artes, mentem siquando libido
Nota subit, solitaque animum dulcedine movit,
Ut læti rursum irriguos accedere fontes
Ardescant studiis, et nota revisere Tempe?
Exultant animis cupidi, pugnantque parentum
Imperiis; nequit ardentes vis ulla morari.
So burns the courser seasoned to the rein,
That spies his females on a distant plain,
And longs to act his pleasures o'er again;
Fired with remembrance of his joys, he bounds,
He foams, and strives to reach the well-known grounds;
The goring spurs his furious flames improve,
And rouse within him all the rage of love;
Plied with the scourge he still neglects his haste,
And moves reluctant when he moves at last,
Reverts his eye, regrets the distant mare,
And neighs impatient for the dappled fair.
How oft the youth would long to change his fate,
Who, high advanced to all the pomp of state,
With grief his gaudy load of grandeur views,
Lost at too high a distance from the Muse!
How oft he sighs by warbling streams to rove,
And quit the palace for the shady grove;
How oft in Tibur's cold retreats to lie,
And gladly stoop to cheerful poverty,
Beneath the rigor of the wintry sky!

But yet how many curse their fruitless toil,

Sic assuetus equus jam duris ora lupatis,
Forte procul notis si armenta aspexit in arvis,
Huc veterum ferri cupit hauud oblitus amorum,
Atque hic atque illic hæret, frænisque repugnat,
Quoove magis stimuli instas, hoc acrius ille
Perfurit; it tandem multo vix verbere victus
Cœptum iter: ipsa tamen respectans crebra moratur
Pascua, et hinnitu late loca complet acuto.

Ah! quoties aliquid sacros reminiscitur æger
Fontes incassum, et lucos suspirat amatos
Dulcisbus creptus Musis puer, atria ut alta
Incolet regum rebus præfectus agendis!
Tybare quam mallet, gelido aut sub Tusculo iniquam
Pauperiemque pati, et ventos preferre nivales!

Contra autem vanum multi effudere laborum,
Who turn and cultivate a barren soil!
This, ere too late, the master may divine
By a sure omen and a certain sign;
The hopeful youth, determined by his choice,
Works without precept, and prevents advice,
Consults his teacher, plies his task with joy,
And a quick sense of glory fires the boy.
He challenges the crowd; the conquest o'er,
He struts away the victor of an hour.
Then, vanquished in his turn, o'erwhelmed with care,
He weeps, he pines, he sickens with despair;
Nor looks his little rivals in the face,
But flies for shelter to some lonely place,
To mourn his shame, and cover his disgrace.
His master's frowns impatient to sustain,
Straight he returns, and wins the day again.
This is the boy his better fates design
To rise the future darling of the Nine;
For him the Muses weave the sacred crown,
And bright Apollo claims him for his own.
Not the least hope the unactive youth can raise,

Quos frustra excoluisse solum male pinguis arenæ
Pœnituit, ventisque viam tentasse negatis.
Quod ne cui sero contingat forte docenti,
Continuo poterit certis præsciscere signis.
Namque puer nullis rectorum hortatibus ipse
Sponte sua exercetur, amatque, rogatque docentes
Primus, inardescitque ingenti laudis amore.
Provocat hinc socios pulchra ad certamina primus,
Exultatque animo victor; superatus amaris
Mordetur curis, latebrasque, et sola requirit
Infelix loca; ad æquales pudet ire, gravesque
Vultus ferre nequit cari rectoris inultus.
Nec lachrymis penitus caruerunt ora decoris.
Hic mihi se Divis, fatisque volentibus afferit,
Huic Musæ indulgent omnes, hunc poscit Apollo.
Dead to the prospect and the sense of praise;
Who your just rules with dull attention hears,
Nor lends his understanding, but his ears;
Resolved his parts in indolence to keep,
He lulls his drowsy faculties asleep;
The wretch your best endeavors will betray,
And the superfluous care is thrown away.

I fear for him who ripens ere his prime;
For all productions there's a proper time.
Oh, may no apples in the spring appear,
Outgrow the seasons, and prevent the year,
Nor mellow yet, till autumn stains the vine,
And the full presses foam with floods of wine!
Torn from the parent tree too soon, they lie
Trod down by every swain who passes by.

Nor should the youth too strictly be confined;
'Tis sometimes proper to unbend his mind.
When tired with study, let him seek the plains,
And mark the homely humors of the swains;
Or, pleased the toils to spread, or horns to wind,

At nullam prorsus tibi spem frustra excitet ille,
Quem non ualla movet praedulcis gloria famae,
Et praecepta negat duras dimittere in aures
Immemor audit, cui turpis inertia mentem
Dejicit, atque hebetes torpent in corpore sensus.
Huic curam moneo ne quisquam impedat inanem.

Nec placet ante annos vates puer: omnia justo
Tempore proveniant: ah! ne mihi olentia poma
Mitescant prius, autunnus bicoloribus uvis
Quam redeat, spumetque cadis vindemia plenis.
Ante diem nam lapsa cadent, ramosque relinquent
Maternos; calcabit humi projecta viator.

Nec ludos puero abnuimus: subducere mentem
Interdum studiis liceat: defessus amena
Rura petat, sœpe et mores observet agrestum;
Et venator agat de vertice Tyburtino
Hunt the fleet mountain-goat or forest-hind.
Meantime the youth, impatient that the day
Should pass in pleasures unimproved away,
Steals from the shouting crowd, and quits the plains,
To sing the sylvan gods in rural strains,
Or calls the Muses to Albunea’s shades,
Courts and enjoys the visionary maids.
So labored fields, with crops alternate blest,
By turns lie fallow and indulge their rest;
The swain contented bids the hungry soil
Enjoy a sweet vicissitude from toil,
Till earth renews her genial powers to bear,
And pays his prudence with a bounteous year.

On a strict view your solid judgment frame,
Nor think that genius is in all the same.
How oft the youth, who wants the sacred fire,
Fondly mistakes for genius his desire,
Courts the coy Muses, though rejected still,
Nor Nature seconds his misguided will!
He strives, he toils with unavailing care,

Veloces capreas, aut tendat retia cervis.
Non ille interea penitus patietur inanem
Ire diem; comitum cœtu se subtrahet utro
Interdum, et sola secum meditabitur umbra
Agrestem Faunis laudem, Musasque sub alta
Consulet Albunea vitreas Anienis ad undas.
Nempe etiam alternis requiescere foetibus arva
Permittunt sponte agricolæ, et cessare novales:
Interea vires tellus inarata resumit,
Quique subit largis respondet frugibus annus.

Verum non eadem tamen omnibus esse memento
Ingenia. Inventus sæpe est, cui carmina curæ,
Cui placeant Musæ, cui non sit læva voluntas;
Nittitur ille tamen frustra, et contendit inani
• Delusus studio, vetitisque accingitur ausis:
Nor Heaven relents, nor Phoebus hears his prayer.
He with success, perhaps, may plead a cause,
Shine at the bar, and flourish by the laws;
Perhaps discover Nature's secret springs,
And bring to light the originals of things.
But sometimes precept will such force impart,
That Nature bends beneath the power of art.

Besides, 'tis no light province to remove
From the rash boy the fiery pangs of love,
Till, ripe in years, and more confirmed in age,
He learns to bear the flames of Cupid's rage.
Oft hidden fires on all his vitals prey,
Devour the youth, and melt his soul away
By slow degrees, blot out his golden dreams,
The tuneful poets and Castalian streams.
Struck with a secret wound, he weeps and sighs;
In every thought the darling phantoms rise;
The fancied charmer swims before his sight,
His theme all day, his vision all the night;
The wandering object takes up all his care,

Numina læva obstant, precibusque vocatus Apollo.
Orabit melius causas fors ille, animoque
Naturam, et cæcos rerum scrutabitur ortus.
Sæpe tamen cultusque frequens, et cura docentum
Imperat ingeniis, naturaque flectitur arte.

Nec labor ille quidem rectoribus ultimus acres
Incauto juveni stimuli avertere amoris,
Donec crescentem doceat maturior ætas
Ferre jugum, atque faces, sævique Cupidonis iras.
Sæpe etenim tectos inmittis in ossibus ignes
Versat amor, mollesque est intus cura medullas,
Nec miserum patitur vatum meminisse, nec undæ
Castaliæ: tantum suspirat vulneræ cæco.
Ante oculos simulachra volant noctesque diesque
Nuntia virginei vultus, quem perditus ardet.
Nec potis est alio fixam traducere mentem
Nor can he quit the imaginary fair.
Meantime his sire, unconscious of his pain,
Applies the tempered medicines in vain;
The plague, so deeply rooted in his heart,
Mocks every slight attempt of Pæan's art;
The flames of Cupid all his breast inspire,
And in the lover's quench the poet's fire.

When in his riper years, without control,
The Nine have took possession of his soul;
When, sacred to their god, the crown he wears,
To other authors let him bend his cares,
Consult their styles, examine every part,
And a new tincture take from every art.
First study Tully's language and his sense,
And range that boundless field of eloquence;
Tully, Rome's other glory, still affords
The best expressions and the richest words;
As high o'er all in eloquence he stood,
As Rome o'er all the nations she subdued.
Let him read men and manners, and explore

Saucius: ignari frustra miscere parentes
Pæonios succos, medicasque Machaonis artes
Consulere: interea penitus calor ille relinquit
Pierius: torquent alii cor molle calores.

Cum vero jam pubescens mente altius hausit
Musarum dulcem sanctique Heliconis amorem,
Et sese Phebo addixit, propriumque sacravit,
Haud tantum explorat vatum monumenta, sed idem
Consulat, atque alios autores discat, ut acri
Nulla sit ingenio quam non libaverit artem.
Proderit in primis linguam Ciceronis ad unguem
Fingere, et eloquii per campos ire patentes.
Ille, decus Latii, magnæ lux altera Romæ,
Ore effundit opes fandi certissimus autore:
Tantum omnes superans preclarae munere linguae,
Quantum iit ante alias Romana potentia gentes.
The site and distances from shore to shore;
Then let him travel, or to maps repair,
And see imagined cities rising there;
Range with his eyes the Earth's fictitious ball,
And pass o'er figured worlds that grace the wall.
Some in the bloody shock of arms appear,
To paint the native horrors of the war;
Through charging hosts they rush before they write,
And plunge in all the tumult of the fight.
But since our lives, contracted in their date
By scanty bounds, and circumscribed by fate,
Can never launch through all the depths of arts,
Ye youths, touch only the material parts;
There stop your labor, there your search control,
And draw from thence a notion of the whole.
From distant climes when the rich merchants come,
To bring the wealth of foreign regions home,
Content the friendly harbors to explore,
They only touch upon the winding shore,
Nor with vain labor wander up and down
To view the land, and visit every town;

Profuit et varios mores hominumque, locorumque
Explorasse situs; multas terraque marique
Aut vidisse ipsum urbes, aut narrantibus illas
Ex aliis novisse, et pictum in pariete mundum.
Quid referam qui, ut saeva queant æquare canendo
Prælia, non horrent certamina Martis adire,
Per mediasque acies vadunt, et bella lacent?
At, quia dura vetant longum nos fata morari
In cunctis, revocatque angusti terminus ævi,
Vos sat erit, pueri, tantum omnes isse per artes,
Quarum summa sequi saltam fastigia oportet.
Nec refert rate qui varias legit æquoris oras,
Mercis ut in patriam referat se dives opimæ,
Si non cuncta oculis lustraverit oppida passim,
That would but call them from their former road,
To spend an age in banishment abroad;
Too late returning from the dangerous main,
To see their countries and their friends again.

Still be the sacred poets your delight,
Read them by day, consult them in the night;
From those clear fountains all your raptures bring,
And draw forever from the Muses' spring.
But let your subject in your bosom roll,
Claim every thought, and draw in all the soul;
That constant object to your mind display,
Your toil all night, your labor all the day.

I need not all the rules of verse disclose,
Nor how their various measures to dispose;
The tutor here with ease his charge may guide
To join the parts and numbers, or divide.
Now let him words to stated laws submit,
Or yoke to measures, or reduce to feet;
Now let him softly to himself rehearse
His first attempts and rudiments of verse;

Et circumfusis longum terat otia terris:
Sat fuerit portus, extremaque littora tantum
Explorasse: secus toto vagus exulet ævo,
Et serus natos dulces, patriamque reviset.

Nulla dies tamen interea tibi, nulla abeat nox,
Quin aliquid vatum sacrorum e fontibus almis
Hauseris, ac dulcem labris ad moveris amnem.
Sed tibi præsertim princeps tunc hæreat illa
Cura animo, noctem atque diem te te excitet una,
Omnem quam propter libuit perferre laborem.

Non hic te quibus aut pedibus spatiisve monebo
Tendantur ducti versus: labor iste regentum
Postulat haud multum curæ, qui sœpe morando
Ipsa minutatim metiri carmina sectis
In partes membris, et tempora certa docebunt.
Continuo, edico, jam tunc animosus alumnus.
Fix on those rich expressions his regard
To use made sacred by some ancient bard.
Tossed by a different gait of hopes and fears,
He begs of Heaven an hundred eyes and ears,
Now here, now there, coy Nature he pursues,
And takes one image in a thousand views.
He waits the happy moment that affords
The noblest thoughts and most expressive words;
He brooks no dull delay, admits no rest;
A tide of passion struggles in his breast;
Round his dark soul no clear ideas play,
The most familiar objects glide away.
All fixed in thought, astonished he appears,
His soul examines and consults his ears
And racks his faithless memory, to find
Some traces faintly sketched upon his mind.
There he unlocks the glorious magazine,
And opens every faculty within,
Brings out with pride their intellectual spoils,
And with the noble treasure crowns his toils;

In numerum incipiat sub leges cogere verba:
Jam tunc summissa meditetur carmina voce,
Sermonum memor, antiquis quos vatibus hausit.
Tum votis sibi centum aures, tum lumina centum
Exoptat dubius rerum, metuensque perici.
Dividit huc illuc animum, cunctamque pererrat
Naturam rerum, versatque per omnia mentem;
Quis rebus dexter modus, aut que mollia fandi
Tempora: vertuntur species in pectore mille.
Nec mora, nec requies; dubio sententia surgit
Multa animo, variatque; omnes convertitur ances
In facies, nescitque etiam notissima, et haeret
Attonitus: nunc multa animum, nunc consult aures,
Secum mente agitans siqua olim audiuta recurset
Sponte sua; et memorem mentem excitat, atque repostas
Thesauris depromit opes, laetusque laboris
And oft mere chance shall images display,
That strike his mind engaged a different way.
Still he persists, regrets no toil nor pain,
And still the task he tried before in vain
Plies with unwearied diligence again.
For oft unmanageable thoughts appear,
That mock his labor and delude his care;
The impatient bard, with all his nerves applied,
Tries all the avenues on every side,
Resolved and bent the precipice to gain,
Though yet he labors at the rock in vain.
By his own strength and Heaven with conquest graced,
He wins the important victory at last;
Stretched by his hands the vanquished monster lies,
And the proud triumph lifts him to the skies.
But when even chance and all his efforts fail,
Nor toils, nor vigilance, nor cares prevail,
His past attempts in vain the boy renews,
And waits the softer seasons of the Muse;
He quits his work, throws by his fond desires,

ipse sui parto fruitor: multa ecce! repente
Fors inopina aperit cunctanti, aliudque putanti.
Jamque hac, jamque illa attentat, textitque retexitque,
Et variis indefessus conatibus instat.

sepe etenim occurrunt haud dictu mollia, ubi haeret
Cura, diu, multoque exercita corda labore.
Nunc hos, nunc illos aditus vestigat, et omnia
Attentans scopulo longum luctatur iniquo,

Dum se qua ostendat facilis via: denique multa
Auto vi, aut coeli et fortuna munere victor
Exultat, domitoque animis it ad æthera monstro.
Ast ubi nulla viam nec vis, nec dextra aperit fors,
Nec prodest vires fessas renovare, nec aptum
Nunc hic, nunc illic captare ad carmina tempus,

Invitus cura absistit, tristisque relinquit
Cocta infecta, pedem referens: ceu forte viator
And from his task reluctantly retires.
Thus o'er the fields the swain pursues his road,
Till stopped at length by some impervious flood,
That from a mountain's brow, o'ercharged with rains,
Bursts in a thundering tide, and foams along the plains;
With horror chilled he traverses the shore,
Sees the waves rise, and hears the torrent roar;
Then grieved returns, or waits with vain delay
Till the tumultuous deluge rolls away.

But in no Iliad let the youth engage
His tender years and unexperienced age;
Let him by just degrees and steps proceed,
Sing with the swains, and tune the tender reed.
He with success an humbler theme may ply,
And, Virgil-like, immortalize a fly;
Or sing the mice, their battles and attacks,
Against the croaking natives of the lakes;
Or with what art her toils the spider sets,
And spins her filmy entrails into nets.

And here embrace, ye teachers, this advice:
Not to be too inquisitively nice,

Si quis tendat iter campis, cui se amnis abundans
Ecce! vie in medio objiciat, spumisque fragosos
Post imbrems volvens montis de vertice fluctus,
Horrescit, ripaque moratus obambulat ancesp:
Tum demum metuens retro redit aest, iterque
Aut alia tenet, aut, cedant dum flumina, differt.

Sed neque inexpertus rerum jam texere longas
Audeat Iliadas: paulatim assuescat, et ante
Incipiat graciles pastorum instare cicitas.
Jam poterit culcis numeris fera dicere fata;
Aut quanta ediderit certamine fulmineus mus
Funera in argutis et amantes humida turmas;
Ordinive dolos, et retia tenuis aranei.

Consiliis etiam hic nostris, vobisque, docentes,
But, till the soul enlarged in strength appears,
Indulge the boy, and spare his tender years;
Till, to ripe judgment and experience brought,
Himself discerns and blushes at a fault.
For if the critic's eyes too strictly pierce,
To point each blemish out in every verse,
Void of all hope the stripling may depart,
And turn his studies to another art.
But if, resolved his darling faults to see,
A youth of genius should apply to me,
And court my elder judgment to peruse
The imperfect labors of his infant Muse,
I should not scruple, with a candid eye,
To read and praise his poem to the sky,
With seeming rapture on each line to pause,
And dwell on each expression with applause.
But when my praises had inflamed his mind,
If some lame verse limped slowly up behind,
One, that himself, unconscious, had not found,
By numbers charmed and led away by sound;

Est monitis opus: ingeniis nam parcere multa
Fas teneris, donec paulatim attollere sese
Incipient animi, videantque in carmine labem
Per se ipsi, et tacito rubeant ulтро ora pudore.
Nam maculas si forte omnes per carmina monstret
Quæsitor serus, adjiciant spem protinus omnem,
Atque alias animo potius vertantur ad artes.
Nostrum igitur si forte adeat puer indole limen
Egregia, ut consulta petat, parere paratus,
Quique velit sese arbitrio supponere nostro,
Excipiam placidus: nec me juventile pigebit
Ad cœlum vultu simulato extollere carmen
Laudibus, et stimulos acres sub pectore sigam,
Post tamen, ut multa spe mentem arrexit ardens,
Si quis forte inter, veluti de vulnere claudus,
Tardus eat versus, quem non videt inscius ipse
I should not fear to minister a prop,
And give him stronger feet to keep it up,
Teach it to run along more firm and sure;
Nor would I show the wound before the cure.

For what remains: the poet I enjoin
To form no glorious scheme, no great design,
Till, free from business, he retires alone,
And flies the giddy tumult of the town,
Seeks rural pleasures and enjoys the glades,
And courts the thoughtful silence of the shades
Where the fair Dryads haunt their native woods,
With all the orders of the sylvan gods.
Here in their soft retreats the poets lie,
Serene, and blest with cheerful poverty;
No guilty schemes of wealth their souls molest,
No cares, no prospects, discompose their rest,
No scenes of grandeur glitter in their view;
Here they the joys of innocence pursue,
And taste the pleasures of the happy few.

From a rock's entrails the barbarian sprung,
Who dares to violate the sacred throng
By deeds or words. The wretch, by fury driven,
Assaults the darling colony of Heaven!
Some have looked down, we know, with scornful eyes
On the bright Muse who taught them how to rise,
And paid, when raised to grandeur, no regard
From that high station to the sacred bard.
Uninjured, mortals, let the poets lie,
Or dread the impending vengeance of the sky;
The gods still listened to their constant prayer,
And made the poets their peculiar care.
They, with contempt, on fortune's gift look down,
And laugh at kings who wear an envied crown.
Raised and transported by their soaring mind,
From their proud eminence they view mankind
Lost in a cloud; they see them toil below,
All busy to promote their common woe.
Of guilt unconscious, with a steady soul,
They see the lightnings flash, and hear the thunders roll;
When, girt with terrors, Heaven's almighty sire
Lances his triple bolts and forked fire,
When o'er high towers the red destroyer plays,

Qui sanctos, genus innocuum, populumque Deorum,
Aut armis audet vates, aut lædere dictis.
Vidi ego, qui ad summos Musarum munere honores
Evicti, mox ingratos contemnere Musas,
Nec vates saltem alloquo dignarier ipsos.
Parcite, mortales, sacros vexare poetas:
Ulotres sperate Deos, sub numine quorum
Semper vita fuit vatum defensa piorum.
Illi omnes sibi fortunas posuere volentes
Sub pedibus, regumque et opes, et sceptr a superba
Ingenti vincunt animo, ac mortalia rident.
Non illis usquam scelerum mens conscia cæcos
Horrescit coeli crepus, ignemve coruscum,
And strikes the mountains with the pointed blaze,
Safe in their innocence, like gods, they rise,
And lift their souls serenely to the skies.

Fly, ye profane! the sacred Nine were given
To bless these lower worlds by bounteous Heaven.
Of old Prometheus from the realms above
Brought down these daughters of almighty Jove,
When to his native earth the robber came,
Charged with the plunder of ethereal flame;
As due compassion touched his generous mind,
To see the savage state of human kind,
When, led to range at large the bright abodes,
And share the ambrosial banquets of the gods,
In many a whirl he saw Olympus driven,
And heard the eternal harmony of Heaven.
Turned round and round, the concert charmed his ears
With all the music of the dancing spheres;
The sacred Nine his wondering eyes behold,
As each her orb in just divisions rolled.
The thief beholds them with ambitious eyes,
And, bent on fraud, he meditates the prize;

Cum pater omnipotens præruptas fulmine turres
Ingeminans quatit, ac montes diverberat altos.
Securi terrorum hilares ad sidera mentes
Arrexere, Deumque agitant sine crimen vitam.

Dona Deum Musæ: vulgus procul este profanum.

Has magni natus Jovis olim duxit ab astris
Callidus in terras insigni fraude Prometheus,
Cum liquidos etiam mortalibus attulit ignes.
Quippe rudes hominum mentes, et pectora dura:
Ipse sagax animo miseratus, ubi astra per auræ
Ire datum, ac Superum lætis accumbere mensis,
Miratus sonitum circumvolventis Olympi
Ingentem, magnique argutos ætheris orbes,
Quos, sua quemque, cieute vario discrimine Musæ;
Continuo utilius ratus est mortalibus addi
A prize — the noblest gift he could bestow,
Next to the fire, on human race below.
At length the Immortals reconciled resigned
The fair celestial sisters to mankind,
Though, bound to Caucasus with solid chains,
The aspiring robber groaned in endless pains;
By which deterred, for ages lay supine
The race of mortals, nor invoked the Nine,
Till Heaven in verse showed man his future state,
And opened every distant scene of fate.
First, the great father of the gods above
Sung in Dodona and the Libyan grove;
Next, to the inquiring nations Themis gave
Her sacred answers from the Phocian cave;
Then Phoebus warned them from the Delphic dome
Of future time and ages yet to come;
And reverend Faunus uttered truths divine
To the first founders of the Latian line.
Next the great race of hallowed prophets came,
With them the Sibyls of immortal fame,

Post ignem nil posse, animumque ad callida movit
Furta vigil. Dii mox coelestia dona volentes
Concessere, doli licet audentissimus ipse
Autor Caucaseo sævas det vertice poenas.
Quo terrore, nisi multo post tempore, inertes
Non ausi dias homines accersere Musas:
Sed ventura prius pandebant carmine soli
Coelicole, dubisique dabant oracula rebus.
Ipse pater Divum Dodonae carmina primus
Et Libycis cecinit lucis, mox Phocidis antro
Insonuit Themis alma, suos quoque pulcher Apollo
Responsis monuit Delphos, nec defuit olim
Antiquis Faunus caneret qui fata Latinis.
Tum Solymum prisci vates, tum sacra Sibyllae
Nomina divinas coeli in penetratio mentes
Inspired with all the god; who, rapt on high,
With more than mortal rage unbounded fly,
And range the dark recesses of the sky.
Next, at their feasts, the people sung their lays
(The same their prophets sung in former days),
Their theme a hero and his deathless praise.

What has to man of nobler worth been given
Than this the best and greatest boon of Heaven?
Whatever power the glorious gift bestowed,
We trace the certain footsteps of a god.
By thee inspired, the daring poet flies,
His soul mounts up, and towers above the skies;
Thou art the source of pleasure, and we see
No joy, no transport, when debarred of thee.
Thy tuneful deity the feathered throng
Confess in all the measures of their song;
Thy great commands the savages obey,
And every silent native of the sea;
Led by thy voice the starting rocks advance,
And listening forests mingle in the dance.
On thy sweet notes the damned rejoice to dwell,
Thy strains suspended all the din of Hell;

Arrípuere, Deumque animis hauseré furentes.
Nec mora, quæ primum Fauni vatesque canebant
Carmina, mortales passim didicere per urbes,
Post epulas laudes heroum, et facta canentes.

Quid mirandum homini cælo divinitus æque
Concessum! mortale genus tua numina sentit,
Quisquis es ille, Deus certe! qui pectora vatum
Incolis, apliantque rapis super æthera mentes.
Te sine nil nobis lætum, nec amabile quicquam.
Ipse etiam volucres vario tua numina cantu
Testantur: pecudesque færa, mutææque natantes
Ad tua jussa citæ properant; tua munera saxa
Dura movent, sylvasque trahunt hinc inde sequentes.
Lulled by the sound, the furies raged no more,
And Hell's infernal porter ceased to roar.
Thy powers exalt us to the realms above,
To feast with gods, and sit the guests of Jove!
Thy presence softens anguish, woe, and strife,
And reconciles us to the load of life.
Hail, thou bright comfort of these low abodes,
Thou joy of men and darling of the gods!
As priest and poet, in these humble lays
I boldly labor to resound thy praise;
To hang thy shrines this gift I bring along,
And to thy altars guide the tender throng.

Te quoque senserunt olim impia Tartara, et umbræ
Pallentes stupuere: minas tibi janitor Orci
Oblitus, sævas posuere et Erinnyes iras.
Tu Jovis ambrosis dás nos accumbere mensis:
Tu nos Diis æquas superis: tu blanda laborum
Sufficis et dure præsens solatia vitae.
Salve hominum dulcis requies, Divumque voluptas!
Ipse tuae egregios audax nunc laudis honores
Ingredior vates idem, Superumque sacerdos,
Sacraque dona fero teneris comitatus alumniis.
BOOK II.

PROCEED, ye Nine, descended from above,
Ye tuneful daughters of allmighty Jove;
To teach the future age I hasten on,
And open every source of Helicon;
Your priest and bard with rage divine inspire,
While to your shrine I lead the blooming choir.
Hard was the way, and dubious, which we trod;
Now show, ye goddesses, a surer road,
Point out those paths, which you can find alone,
To all the world but to yourselves unknown.
Lo! all the Hesperian youths with me implore
Your softer influence and propitious power,
Who, ranged beneath my banners, boldly tread
Those arduous tracks to reach your mountain's head.
New rules 'tis now my province to impart,
First to invent, and then dispose with art,—
Each a laborious task; but they who share

PERGITE Pierides natæ Jovis: en! mihi totum
Nunc fas venturis Helicona recludere seclis
Inspirate animum: templo ipse in vestra sacerdos
Sacra ferens, juvenes florentes mollibus annis
Duco audens durum per iter: vos, mollia, Divae,
Si qua latent, vobis tantum divoritia nota,
Præsentes monstrate, novosque ostendite calles,
Quos teneam. Vos en! omnis, vos Itala pubes,
Quæ juga sub nostris nunc tendit ad ardua signis,
Supplicibus poscit votis, facilesque precatur.
Nam mihi nunc reperire apta, atque reperta docendum
Digerere, atque suo quæque ordine rite locare.
Durus uterque labor: sed quos Deus aspicit æquus,
Heaven's kinder bounty and peculiar care,
A glorious train of images may find,
Preventing hope and crowding on the mind.
The other task, to settle every part,
Depends on judgment and the powers of art;
From whence in chief the poet hopes to raise
His future glory and immortal praise.

This as a rule the noblest bards esteem,
To touch at first in general on the theme,
To hint at all the subject in a line,
And draw in miniature the whole design.
Nor in themselves confide, but next implore
The timely aid of some celestial power;
To guide your labors and point out your road,
Choose, as you please, your tutelary god;
But still invoke some guardian deity,
Some power, to look auspicious from the sky;
To nothing great should mortals bend their care,
Till Jove be solemnly addressed in prayer.
'Tis not enough to call for aid divine,
And court but once the favor of the Nine;
When objects rise that mock your toil and pain,

Sæpe suis subito inventient accommoda votis.
Altera nempe arti tantum est obnoxia cura,
Unde solent laudem in primis optare poetæ.
Vestibulum ante ipsum, primoque in limine semper
Prudentes leviter rerum fastigia summa
Libant, et parcis attingunt omnia dictis,
Quæ canere statuere: simul cælestia Divum
Auxilia implorant, propriis nil viribus ausi.
Quos ores autem non magni denique refert,
Dum memor auspiciis cujusquam cuncta Deorum
Aggrediere: Jovis neque enim nisi rite vocato
Numine fas quicquam ordiri mortalibus altum.
Nec sat opeem implorare semel, Musasque ciere,
Above the labor and the reach of man,
Then you may supplicate the blest abodes,
And ask the friendly succor of the gods.
Shock not your reader, nor begin too fierce,
Nor swell and bluster in a pomp of verse;
At first all needless ornament remove,
To shun his prejudice and win his love;
At first you find most favor and success
In plain expression and a modest dress;
For if too arrogant you vaunt your might,
You fall with greater scandal in the fight,
When on the nicest point your fortune stands,
And all your courage, all your strength demands.
With gradual flights surprise us as we read,
And let more glorious images succeed,
To wake our souls, to kindle our desire
Still to read on, and fan the rising fire.
But ne'er the subject of your work proclaim
In its own colors and its genuine name;
Let it by distant tokens be conveyed,

Sed quoties, veluti scopuli, durissima dictu
Objicient sese tibi, non superanda labore
Mortali, Divos toties orare licebit.
Incipiens odium fugito, facilesque legentum
Nil tumidus demulce animos, nec grandia jam tum
Convenit aut nimium cultum ostentantia fari;
Omnia sed nudis prope erit fas promere verbis:
Ne, si magna sones, cum nondum ad praedia ventum,
Deficias medio irrisus certamine, cum res
Postulat ingentes animos, vioresque valentes.
Principii potius semper majora sequantur:
Prothinus illectas succende cupidine mentes,
Et studium lectorum animis innecte legendi.
Jam vero cum rem propones, nomine nunquam
Prodere conveniet manifesto: semper opertis
And wrapped in other words, and covered in their shade.
At last the subject from the friendly shroud
Bursts out, and shines the brighter from the cloud;
Then the dissolving darkness breaks away,
And every object glares in open day.
Thus great Ulysses' toils were I to choose
For the main theme that should employ my Muse,
By his long labors of immortal fame
Should shine my hero, but conceal his name;
As one who, lost at sea, had nations seen,
And marked their towns, their manners, and their men,
Since Troy was leveled to the dust by Greece—
Till a few lines epitomized the piece.

But study now what order to maintain,
To link the work in one continued chain,
That, when the Muse displays her artful scheme
And at the proper time unfolds the theme,
Each part may find its own determined place,
Laid out with method and disposed with grace;
That to the destined scope the piece may tend,

Indiciis, longe et verborum ambage petita
Significant, umbraque obducant: inde tamen, ceu
Sublustrī e nebula, rerum tralucet imago
Clarius, et certis datur omnia cernere signis.
Hinc si dura mihi passus dicendus Ulysses,
Non illum vero memorabo nomine, sed qui
Et mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes
Naufragus, eversæ post sæva incendia Trojæ.
Addam alia, angustis complectens omnia dictis.

Ergo age quæ vates servandi cura fatiget
Ordinis intentos operi, cum carmine aperto
Rem tempus narrare, loco ut disposita decenti
Omnia sint opere in toto, nec metà laborum
Usquam dissidue at ingressibus ultima primis.
Principio invigilant non expectata legenti
And keep one constant tenor to the end.
First, to surprising novelties inclined,
The bards some unexpected objects find,
To wake attention and suspend the mind.
A cold dull order bravely they forsake;
Fixed and resolved the winding way to take,
They nobly deviate from the beaten track.
The poet marks the occasion, as he sings,
To launch out boldly from the midst of things,
Where some distinguished incident he views,
Some shining action that deserves a Muse;
Thence by degrees the wondering reader brings
To trace the subject backward to its springs,
Lest at its entrance he should idly stay,
Shocked at his toil and dubious of his way.
For when set down so near the promised goal,
The flattering prospect tempts and fires his soul;
Already past the treacherous bounds appear,
Then most at distance when they seem so near;
Far from his grasp the fleeting harbor flies,
Courts his pursuit, but mocks his dazzled eyes;

Promere, suspensosque animos novitate tenere,
Atque per ambages seriem deducere rerum:
Nec, quacunque viam suadet res gesta, sequuntur.
Plerumque a mediis, arrepto tempore, fari
Incipiunt, ubi facta vident jam carmine digna.
Inde minutatim gestarum ad limina rerum
Tendentes prima repetunt ab origine factum.
Hoc faciunt, operum primo ne in limine lector
Haeret, ignarusque vie, incertusque laborum.
Namque ubi eum metam jam tum statuere sub ipsam,
Laetior ingreditur spe mentem arrectus inani,
Dum putat exigu finem prope adesse laboris.
Sed portus, quos ante oculos habet usque propinquos
Approperans, jam jamque tenet similisque tenenti est:
The promised region he with joy had spied,
Vast tracks of oceans from his reach divide;
Still must he backward steer his lengthened way,
And plough a wide interminable sea.
No skilful poet would his Muse employ,
From Paris' vote to trace the fall of Troy,
Nor every deed of Hector to relate,
While his strong arm suspended Ilion's fate—
Work for some annalist, some heavy fool,
Correctly dry and regularly dull!
Best near the end those dreadful scenes appear;
Wake then, and rouse the furies of the war,
But for his ravished fair at first engage
Peleides' soul in unrelenting rage.
Be this the cause that every Phrygian flood
Swells with red waves, and rolls a tide of blood,
That Xanthus' urns a purple deluge pour,
And the deep trenches float with human gore.
Nor former deeds in silence must we lose,
The league at Aulis, and the mutual vows,
The Spartan raging for his ravished spouse,

Longa procul longo via dividit invia tractu:
Flectendi retro cursus, via plurima eunti
Restat adhuc, multumque illi maris æquor arandum.
Haud sapiens quisquam, annales ceu congerat, Illi
Inchoet excidium veteri pastoris ab usque
Judicio, memorans ex ordine singula, quicquid
Ad Trojam Argolicis cessatum est Hectore duro.
Conveniet potius prope finem prælia tanta
Ordiri, atque graves iras de virgine rapta
Aversi Æacidae præmittere: tum fera bella
Consurgunt, tum pleni amnes Danaumque, Phrygumque,
Xanthusque, Simoisque, et inundant sanguine fossæ.
Haud tamen interea quæ præcessere silendum,
Aulide jurantes Danaos, vectasque per æquor
The thousand ships, the woes which Ilion bore
From Greece, for nine revolving years before.
This rule with judgment should the bard maintain,
Who brings Laërtes' wandering son again
From burning Ilion to his native reign.
Let him not launch from Ida's strand his ships,
With his attendant friends, into the deeps,
Nor stay to vanquish the Ciconian host;
But let him first appear (his comrades lost)
With fair Calypso on the Ogygian coast.
From thence, a world of toils and dangers past,
Waft him to rich Phæacia's realms at last,
There at the feast his wanderings to relate,
His friends' dire change, his own relentless fate.
But if the bard of former actions sings,
He wisely draws from those remoter springs
The present order and the course of things.
As yet unfold the event on no pretense,
'Tis your chief task to keep us in suspense;
Nor tell what presents Atreus' son prepares,

Mille rates, raptusque Helenes, et conjugis iras,
Quæque novem Troja est annos perpessa priores.
Atque etiam in patriam siquis deducere adortus
Errantem Laertiaden post Pergama capta,
Non illum Idaeo solventem e littore classem
Cum sociis primum memoret, Ciconesque subactos:
Sed jam tum Ogygiam delatum sistat ad alta
Virginis, amissis sociis, Atlantidos antra.
Exin post varios Phæacum in regna labores
Inferat: hic positis demum ipse miserrima mensis,
Erroresque suos narret, casusque suorum.
Ante tamen si gesta canunt, ab origine causas
Expeidiunt, quis dehinc status, et [aut] quæ tempora rerum.
Primus at ille labor versus tenuisse legentem
Suspensum, incertumque dieu qui denique rerum
Eventus maneant: quo tandem durus Achilles
To reconcile Achilles to the wars,
Or by what god's auspicious conduct led,
From Polyphemus' den Ulysses fled.
Pleased with the toil, and on the prospect bent,
Our souls leap forward to the wished event;
No call of nature can our search restrain,
And sleep, and thirst, and hunger, plead in vain;
Glad we pursue the labor we embraced,
And leave reluctant when we leave at last.
See how the bard, triumphant in his art,
Sports with our passions and commands the heart!
Now here, now there, he turns the varying song,
And draws at will the captive soul along;
Racked with uncertain hints, in every sense
We feel the lengthened anguish of suspense.
When Homer once has promised to rehearse
Bold Paris' fight in many a sounding verse,
He soon perceives his reader's warm desire
Wrapped in the event, and all his soul on fire.
The poet then contrives some specious stay,

Munere placatus regi rursum induat arma
In Teucros: cujusve Dei Laertius heros
Auxilio, Polypheme, tuis evadat ab anris:
Lectores cupidi expectant, durantque volentes,
Nec perferre negant superest quodcunque laborum,
Inde licet fessos somnus gravis avocet artus,
Aut epulis placanda fames, Cererisque libido:
Hoc studium, hanc operam sero dimittimus ægri.
Nonne vides ut sæpe aliquid nimis arte superbit
Improbus, et captis animis illudere gaudet,
Et nunc huc, deinde huc mentes deducit hiantes,
Suspenditque diu miserios, torquentque legentes?
Ille quidem si te magnum certamen Atridæ
Et Paridis, multo promissum carmine nuper,
Expectare avidum sævaque cupidine captum
Senserit, usque moras trahet ultro, et differet arma,
Before he tells the fortune of the day, —
Till Helen to the king and elders show,
From some tall tower, the leaders of the foe,
And name the heroes in the fields below.
When chaste Penelope, to gain her end,
Invites her suitors the tough bow to bend
(Her nuptial bed the victor's promised prize),
With what address her various arts she plies! —
Skilled in delays, and politicly slow
To search her treasures for her hero's bow.

None lead the reader in the dark along
To the last goal that terminates the song;
Sometimes the event must glance upon the sight,
Not glare in day nor wholly sink in night.
'Tis thus Anchises to his son relates
The various series of his future fates;
For this the prophets see, on Tiber's shore,
Wars, horrid wars, and Latium red with gore,
A new Achilles rising to destroy
With boundless rage the poor remains of Troy;

Dum celsa Priamo patribusque e turre Lacæna,
Nomine quemque suo, reges ostendit Achivos.
Ipsa procos etiam ut jussit certare sagittis
Penelope, optatas promittens callida tædas
Victori, per quanta moræ dispensia mentes
Suspensas trahet, ante viri quam proferet arcum
Thesauris clausum antiquis, penitusque repostum!

Haud tamen omnino incertum metat usque sub ipsam
Exactorum operum lectorem in nube relinquunt.
Sed rerum eventus nonnullis sepe canendo
Indiciis porro ostendunt in luce maligna,
Sublustrique aliquid dant cernere noctis in umbra.
Hinc pater Æneam, multique instantia vates
Fata docent Latio bella, horrida bella manere,
Atque alium partum Trojanis rebus Achillem.
But raise his mind with prospects of success,
And give the promise of a lasting peace.
This knew the hero when he sought the plains,
Sprung from his ships and charged the embattled swains,
Hewed down the Latian troops with matchless might
(The first auspicious omen of the fight),
And at one blow gigantic Theron killed,
Bold, but in vain, and foremost of the field.
Thus too Patroclus with his latest breath
Foretold his unregarding victor's death;
His parting soul anticipates the blow
That waits brave Hector from a greater foe.
Thou too, poor Turnus, just before thy doom,
Couldst read thy end and antedate a tomb,
When o'er thy head the baleful fury flew,
And in dire omens set thy fate to view;
A bird obscene, she fluttered o'er the field,
And screamed thy death, and beat thy sounding shield.
For lo! the time, the fatal time is come,
Charged with thy death, and heavy with thy doom,—
When Turnus, though in vain, shall rue the day,

Spem tamen incendunt animo, firmantque labantem,
Spondentes meliora, et res in fine quietas.
Ipse quoque agnovit per se, cum in limine belli
Navibus egressus turmas invasit agrestes,
Atque (omen pugnæ) prostravit marte Latinos,
Occiso, ante alios qui sese objecerat, hoste.
Fata Mencetiades etiam praedixerat olim
Victori mortis majori instare sub hoste,
Quamvis haud fuerit res credita. Tu quoque, Turne,
Praevidisse tuos poteras, heu! perdite, casus
Longe ante exitium, cum crebro obscoena volucris
Per clypeum, perque ora volans stridentibus alis
Omine turbavit mentem, admonuitque futuri.
Hinc tibi tempus erit, magno cum optaveris emptum
Shall curse the golden belt he bore away,
Shall wish too late young Pallas' spoils unsought,
And mourn the conquest he so dearly bought.
The event should glimmer through its gloomy shroud,
Though yet confused, and struggling in the cloud;
So, to the traveller, as he journeys on
To reach the walls of some far distant town,
If, high in air, the dubious turrets rise,
Peep o'er the hills and dance before his eyes,
Pleased the refreshing prospect to survey,
Each stride he lengthens, and beguiles the way,
More pleased (the tempting scene in view) to go,
Than pensively to walk the gloomy vales below.

Unless the theme within your bosom roll,
Work in each thought, and run through all the soul,
Unless you alter with incessant pain,
Pull down, and build the fabric o'er again,
In vain, when rival wits your wonder raise,
You'll strive to match those beauties which you praise.

To one just scope with fixed design go on;

Intactum Pallanta, et cum spolia aurea baltei
Oderis, atque tibi haud stabit victoria parvo.
Nam juvat haec ipsos inter præscisse legentes,
Quamvis sint et adhuc confusa, et nubila porro.
Haud aliter longinquæ petit qui forte viator
Mœnia, si positas altis in collibus arces
Nunc etiam dubias oculis videt, incipit ultro
Lætior ire viam, placidumque urgere laborem,
Quam cum nusquam uææ cernuntur, quas adit, arces,
Obscurum sed iter tendit convallibus imis.

Tuque ideo, nisi mente prius, nisi pectore toto
Crebra agites quodcunque canis, tecumque premendo
Totum opus ædifices, iterumque iterumque retractes,
Laudatum alterius frustra mirabere carmen.

Nec te fors inopina regat, casusque labantem:
Let sovereign reason dictate from her throne,
By what determined methods to advance,
But never trust to arbitrary chance.
Where chance presides, all objects wildly joined Crowd on the reader, and distract his mind;
From theme to theme unwilling is he tossed,
And in the dark variety is lost.
You see some bards, who bold excursions make
In long digressions from the beaten track,
And paint a wild unnecessary throng
Of things and objects foreign to the song,
For new descriptions from the road depart,
Devoid of order, discipline, and art.

So, many an anxious toil and danger passed,
Some wretch returns from banishment at last;
With fond delay to range the shady wood,
Now here, now there, he wanders from the road;
From field to field, from stream to stream he roves,
And courts the cooling shelter of the groves.
For why should Homer deck the gorgeous car,

Omnia consiliis provisa, animoque volenti
Certus age, ac semper nutu rationis eant res.
Quandoquidem sepe incerti huc, illucque vagamur,
Inque alia ex aliis inviti illabimur orsa,
Dum multa ac varians animis sententia surgit.

Sæpe vides primis ut quidam longius orsis
Digrediuntur, et oblii quasi cœpta priora
Longe aliis hærent nulla sermonibus arte,
Et longos peragrant tractus aliena canentes.
Ac velut in patriam peregrina si quis ab ora
Ire cupit, post exilium, durosque labores,
Ille tamen recto non qua via tramite ducit
Carpit iter, sed nunc vagus hac, nunc errat et illac,
Undique dum studio fontes invisit inani,
Fontesque, fluviósque, et aménos frigore lucos.
Nam quid opus gemmis armatos pingere currus,
When our raised souls are eager for the war?
Or dwell on every wheel, when loud alarms
And Mars in thunder calls the host to arms?
When with his heroes we some dastard find,
Of a vile aspect and malignant mind,
His awkward figure is not worth our care,
His monstrous length of head, or want of hair,
Not though he goes with mountain shoulders by,
Short of a foot, or blinking in an eye.
Such trivial objects call us off too long
From the main drift and tenor of the song.
Drances appears a juster character,
In council bold, but cautious in the war;
Factious and loud the listening throng he draws,
And swells with wealth and popular applause;
But what in ours would never find a place,
The bold Greek language may admit with grace.

Why should I here the stratagems recite,
And the low tricks of every little Wit?
Some out of time their stock of knowledge boast,

Multa superque rotas, super axes multa morari
Tunc, cum bella manus poscunt, atque arma fremit Mars?
Nec sique inter memoras heroas in armis castra sequi, cupidi expectant audire legentes
Qua facie, quibus ille humeris, qualive capillo
Inciderat, captusne oculo, an pes claudicet alter,
Aut longo vertex ducti consurgat acutus,
Ordine cuncta, aliud quasi nil tibi restet agendum.

Aptior Ausonius Drances, cui frigida bello
Dextra quidem, sed consiliis non futilis autor,
Dives opum, pollens lingua, et popularibus auris.
Multa tamen Graiae fert indulgentia linguae,
Que nostrum minus addeceant, graviora sequentes.
Quid tibi nonnullas artes, studiumque minorum

Digitized by Google
Till in the pedant all the bard is lost.
Such without care their useless lumber place;
One black, confused, and undigested mass
With a wild heap encumbers every part,
Nor ranged with grace, nor methodized with art;
But then in chief, when things abstruse they teach,
Themes too abstracted for the vulgar reach:
The hidden nature of the deities,
The secret laws and motions of the skies,
Or from what dark original began
The fiery soul, and kindled up the man.
Oft they in odious instances engage,
And for examples ransack every age,
With every realm; no hero will they pass,
But act against the rules of time and place.
Avoid, ye youths, these practices; nor raise
Your swelling souls to such a thirst of praise.
Some bards of eminence there are, we own,
Who sing sometimes the journeys of the Sun,
The rising stars, and labors of the Moon,

Indignum referam? sunt qui, ut se plurima nosse
Ostentent, pateatque suarum opulentia rerum,
Quicquid opum congerunt, sine more, sine arte
Irrisi effundunt, et versibus omnia acervant:
Præcipue siquid summotum, siquid opertum,
Atque parum vulgi notum auribus, aut radiantis
De cæli arcana ratione, Deumve remota
Natura, aut animæ obscuro impenetrabilis ortu.
Sæpe etiam accumulant antiqua exempla virorum,
Carminis ingratum genus! hinc atque inde petita,
Quamvis sæpe illis tempusque locusque repugnet.
Ne, pueri, ne talem animis inducite morem,
Nec vos decipiat laudis tam dira cupidio.
Haud sum animi dubius magnos memorare poetas
Interdum Solisque vias, Lunæque labores,
What impulse bids the ocean rise and fall,
What motions shake and rock the trembling ball,
Though foreign subjects had engaged their care,
The rage, the din and thunder of the war
Through the loud field; the genius of the earth,
Or rules to raise the vegetable birth;
Yet 'tis but seldom, and when time and place
Require the thing, and reconcile to grace.
Those foreign objects necessary seem,
And flow, to all appearance, from the theme;
With so much art so well concealed they please,
When wrought with skill, and introduced with ease.
Should not Anchises, such occasion shown,
Resolve the questions of his godlike son,—
If souls deprived of Heaven's fair light repair
Once more to day, and breathe the vital air,
Or if from high Olympus first they came,
Inspired with portions of ethereal flame,
Though here encumbered with the mortal frame?
Tire not too long one subject when you write,
For 'tis variety that gives delight;

Astrorumque ortus, qua vi tumida sæquora surgat,
Unde tremor terris; quamvis illi orsa sequantur
Longe alia, aut duri cantantes prælia Martis,
Aut terræ mores varios, cultusque docentes.
At prius invenere locum, dein, tempore capto,
Talia subjiciunt parci, nec sponte videntur
Fari ea: rem credas hoc ipsam poscere, ita astum
Dissimulant, aditusque petunt super omnia molles.
Cur pater Anchises natum opportuna rogantem
Non doceat, rursusne animæ semel æthere casæ
Ad celum redeant, blandique ad luminis auras?
Igneus annus ollis vigor, et cælestis origo
Seminibus, quantum non noxia corpora tardant?
Quandoquidem, ut varium sit opus (namque inde voluptas
But when to that variety inclined,
You seek new objects to relieve the mind,
Be sure let nothing forced or labored seem,
But watch your time, and steal from off your theme,
Conceal with care your longing to depart —
For art's chief pride is still to cover art.
So Mulciber, in future ages skilled,
Engraved Rome's glories on Æneas' shield,
On the bright orb her future fame enrolled,
And with her triumphs charged the rising gold;
Here figured fights the blazing round adorn,
There his long line of heroes yet unborn.
But if a poet of Ausonian birth
Describes the various kingdoms of the Earth
Wide interspersed — the Medes, or swarthy Moors —
The different natures of their soils explores,
And paints the trees that bloom on India's shores,
On his own land he looks with partial eyes,
And lifts the fair Hesperia to the skies;

Grata venit) rebus non usque hærebis in iisdem.
Verum ubi vis animis varius succurrere fessis,
Ingriderisque novas facies, rerumque figuræs,
Paulatim capto primis delabere cæptis
Tempore, nec positis insit violentia rebus:
Omnia sponte sua veniant, lateatque vagandi
Dulcis amor, cunctamque potens labor acculat artem.
Sic olim Ænææ venturi haud inscius ævi
Rec Italum in clypeo, Romanorumque triumphos
Fecerat Ignipotens, pugnataque in ordine bella,
Stirpis ab Ascanio quondam genus omne futurum.
Tum si quis Latio cretus de sanguine vates
Prosequitur variasoras, moresque locorum,
Medosque, Æthiopasque, et dites arboris Indos;
Immemor ille nimis patriæ, oblitusve suorum,
Si non Italæ laudes æquaverit astra;
To all the fair Hesperia he prefers,
And makes the woods of Bactria yield to hers,
With proud Panchaia—though her groves she boasts,
And breathes a cloud of incense from her coasts.

Hear then, ye generous youths, on this regard
I should not blame the conduct of the bard,
Who in soft numbers and a flowing strain
Relieves and reconciles our ears again.

When I the various implements had sung
That to the fields and rural trade belong,
In sweet harmonious measures would I tell
How Nature mourned when the great Caesar fell.
When Bacchus' curling vines had graced my lays,
The rural pleasures next should share my praise.

The labor ended, and complete the whole,
Some bards with pleasure wander round the goal,
The flights and sallies of the Muse prolong,
And add new beauties to the finished song;
Pleased with the excursion of the charming strain,
We strive to quit the work, but strive in vain.

Cui neque Medorum sylvae, neque Bactra, neque Indi,
Totaque thuriferis Panchaia certet arenis.

Quare etiam, egregii vates, ego carmina vestra
Hand equidem arguerim, qui pectora fessa legentum
Interdum, atque aures recreatis carmine dulci.

Non ego, post Celei crates, post tribula dicta,
Rastraque, plaustraque, et inflexo cum vomere aratra,
Addubitem flere extincti miserabile funus
Romani ducis: aut ruris laudare quietem,
Post vites dictas Bacchi, et sylvestria dona.

Vidi etiam, qui jam perfecto munere longam
Subjecere moram, extremo sub sine vagantes
Exactorum operum, vacua dum carmina musa
In longum traherent, cujus dulcedine mira
Fessi animi cuperent iterumque iterumque redire.
Thus, were the bees the subject of my Muse,
Their laws, their natures, and celestial dews,
Poor Aristæus should his fate disclose,
His mother's counsel should assuage his woes;
Old Proteus here should struggle in his chain,
There in soft verse the Thracian bard complain
(As Philomela on a poplar bough
Bewails her young, melodious in her woe);
Pangæan steeps his sorrows should return,
And vocal Thrace with Rhodope should mourn,
Hebrus should roll, low-murmuring, to the deep,
And barbarous nations wonder why they weep.
Thus too the poets who the names declare
Of kings and nations gathering to the war,
Sometimes diversify the strain, and sing
The wondrous change of the Ligurian king;
While for his Phaëton his sorrows flow,
And his harmonious strains beguile his woe,
O'er all the man the snowy feathers rise,
And in a tuneful swan he mounts the skies.
Thus too Hippolytus, by Dian's care

Me nulla idcirco quiret vis sistere quin, post
Naturas et apum dictas et liquida mella,
Tristis Aristæi questus, monitusque parentis
Prosequeret dulci sermone, et Protea vinctum.
Addam Threicii carmen miserabile vatis,
Qualis populea queritur Philomela sub umbra,
Ut Rhodope, ut Pangæa fleant, Rhesi ut domus alta,
Atque Getæ, atque Hebrus, et Actias Orithyia.
Non aliam ob causam reges qui in prælia euntes
Dinumerant, populosque, moram traxere canentes
Aut Ligurum regi, ob casum Phaethontis amati
Dum gemit, et moestum musa solatur amorem,
In sylvis cano natas in corpore pluñas:
Aut rursum Hippolytum superas venisse sub auras
And Pæan's art, returns to upper air.
The bards now paint the arms their heroes wield,
And each bold figure on the glittering shield;
Great Aventinus, great Alcides' son,
Wore the proud trophy which his father won;
An hundred serpents o'er the buckler rolled,
And Hydra hissed from all her heads in gold.
Now blooming Tempe's cool retreats they sing,
And now with flowery beauties paint the spring.
Now with a sylvan scene the floods they hide,
Or teach the famed Eridanus to glide,
Or sport on fabled Acheloüs' side,
Or hoary Nereus' numerous race display,
The hundred azure sisters of the sea;
With them the nymphs that haunt their native woods,
And the long orders of the sylvan gods.

With gay descriptions sprinkle here and there
Some grave instructive sentences with care,
That touch on life, some moral good pursue,
And give us virtue in a transient view—
Rules which the future sire may make his own,
And point the golden precepts to his son.

Sometimes on little images to fall,
And thus illustrate mighty things by small,
With due success the licensed poet dares:
When to the ants the Phrygians he compares,
Who, leaving Carthage, gather to the seas,
Or the laborious Tyrians to the bees.
But swarming flies, offensive animals,
That buzz incessant o'er the smoking pales,
Are images too low to paint the hosts
That roll and blacken o'er Ausonia's coasts;
The lofty Muse who sung the Latian war
Would think such trivial things beneath her care.
How from his majesty would Virgil fall,
If Turnus, scarce repelled from Ilion's wall,
Retiring grimly with a tardy pace,
Had e'er been figured by the patient ass!
Whom unregarded troops of boys surround,
While o'er his sides their rattling strokes resound;

Quodque olim jubeant natos meminisse parentes.
At non exiguis etiam te insistere rebus
Abnuerim, si magna voles componere parvis,
Aut apibus Tyrios, aut Troja ex urbe profectos
Formicis, Libycum prope rapt dum linquere littus.
Sed non Ausonii recte sedissima musca
Militis aequarit numerum, cum plurima mulctram
Pervolitat; neque enim in Latio magno ore sonantem
Arma, ducesque decet tam viles decidere in res.
Nec dictis erit ullus honos, si cum actus ab urbe
Daunius hostili Teucris urgentibus heros
Vix pugna absistit, similis dicetur asello,
Quem pueri iato pascentem pingua in argo
Ordia stipitibus duris detrudere tendunt
Instantes, quauiuntque sudes per terga, per armos:
Slow he gives way, and crops the springing grain,
Turns on each side, and stops to graze again.
In every point the thing is just, we know,
But then the image is itself too low;
For Turnus, sprung from such a glorious strain,
The vile resemblance would with scorn disdain.
With better grace the lion may appear,
Who, singly impotent the crowd to dare,
Repel, or stand their whole embodied war,
Looks grimly back and rolls his glaring eye,
Despairs to conquer and disdains to fly.

Since fictions are allowed, be sure, ye youths,
Your fictions wear at least the air of truths.
When Glaucus meets Tydides on the plain,
Inflamed with rage, and reeking from the slain,
Some think they could not pass the time away,
In such long narratives and cool delay,
Amidst the raging tumult of the day.
But yet we hear fierce Diomed relate
The crime of bold Lycurgus, and his fate;

Ille autem campo vix cedere, et inter eundum
Sæpe hic, atque illic avidis insistere malis.
Omnia conveniunt, rerumque simillima imago est:
Credo equidem; sed turpe pecus: nec Turnus asellum,
Turnus avis atavisque potens, dignabitur heros.

Aptius hanc speciem referet leo, quem neque terga
Ira dare, aut virtus patitur, neque sufficit unus
Tendere tot contra, telisque obstare sequentum.
Hoc quoque non studiis nobis levioribus instat
Curandum, ut, quando non semper vera profamur

Fingentes, saltem sint illa simillima veris.
Vidi aliquos, qui, cum Glauco medio æquore belli
Tydides ferus occurrit, vix credere possunt
Tot traxisse moras longis sermonibus usos
Inter se seambos, dum fervent omnia cæde.
Alter enim duri narrat fera fata Lycurgi,
And Glaucus talks of brave Bellerophon,
Doomed for a lawless passion not his own,
Sets forth the hero's great exploits to view,
How the bold chief the dire Chimæra slew,
The Solymæan host, and Amazonian crew.
For those surprising fictions are designed
With their sweet falsehoods to delight the mind;
The bards expect no credit should be given
To the bare lie, though authorized by Heaven,
Which oft with confidence they vent abroad,
Beneath the needful sanction of a god.
'Twas thus the roasted heifers of the Sun
Spoke o'er the fire with accents not their own;
'Twas thus Achilles' steed his silence broke,
And Trojan ships in human voices spoke;
As wrought by Heaven these wonders they relate,
All airy visions of the ivory gate!

Speak things but once, if order be your care,
For more the cloyed attention will not bear,
And tedious repetitions tire the ear;

Crimine damnati falso alter Bellerophonis
Facta refert, magna domitam virtute Chimeram,
Et victos pariter Solymos, et Amazonas armis.
Nam quæ multa canunt ficta, et non credita vates,
Dulcia quo vacuas teneant mendacia mentes,
Illis nulla fides, quam nec sibi denique aperti
Exposcunt, nec dissimulant, licet omnia obumbrent
Relligione Deum, quæ non credenda profantur.
Idcirco Solis perhibent arma menta
Mortua, et in verubus Vulcano tosta columnis,
Ut minus acris equos itidem miremur Achillis,
Verbaque veliferas rostris fudisse carinas;
Omnia quæ porta veniunt insomnia eburna.

Disce etiam, pulchri tibi si cura ordinis ullæ est,
Res tantum semel effari: repetita bis aures
Ferre negant; subeunt fessas fastidia mentes:
In this we differ from the Grecian train,
Who tell Atrides' visions o'er again.
'Tis not enough with them we know the cause
Why great Achilles from the war withdraws,
Unless the weeping hero, on the shore,
Tells his blue mother all we heard before.
So much on punctual niceties they stand,
That, when their kings dispatch some high command,
All, word for word, the embassadors rehearse
In the same tenor of unvaried verse.
Not so did Venulus from Arpi bring
The final answer of the Ætolian king.

Let others labor on a vast design,
A less, but polished with due care, be thine;
To change its structure be your last delight;
Thus spend the day and exercise the night,
Incessant in your toil. But if you choose
A larger field and subject for your Muse,
If scanty limits should the theme confine,

Quanquam etiam hic nostris cernes differe Pelasgos.
Nam tibi non referent semel illi somnia Atridæ:
Nec sat erit, si rettulerint quid fortis Achilles
Mente dolens Danaum sese subduxerit armis,
Ipse iterum Æacides nisi solo in littore ponti
Flens eadem æquoreæ narraverit omnia matri.
Quin etiam reges, cum dant mandata ferenda,
Cuncta canunt prius ipsi, eadem mox carmine eodem
Missi oratores repetunt, nihil ordine verso.
Non sic Ausonius Venulus, legatus ab Arpis
Cum redit, Ætoli referens responsa tyranni.

Altum aliis assurgat opus: tu nocte dieque
Exiguum meditator, ubi sint omnia culta,
Et visenda novis iterumque iterumque figuris.
Quod si longarum cordi magis ampla viarum
Sunt spatio, angustis cum res tibi finibus arcta,
In longum trahito arte: visa tibi mille trahendi,
Learn with just art to lengthen the design
Beyond its native bounds. The roving mind
A thousand methods to this end may find;
Unnumbered fictions may with truths be joined;
Nature supplies a fund of matter still;
Then cull the rich variety at will.
See how the bard calls down the embattled gods,
All ranged in factions, from their bright abodes!
Who, fired with mutual hate, their arms employ,
And in the field declare for Greece or Troy,
Till Jove convenes a council to assuage
Their rising fury, and suspend their rage—
Though the blest gods, removed from human eyes,
Live in immortal ease within the distant skies.
And now the infernal realm his theme he makes,
The reign of Pluto, the Tartarean lakes,
The Furies dreadful with their curling snakes.
He gathers omens from each bird that flies,
And signs from every wing that beats the skies.
He now describes a banquet, where the guest
Prolongs with narratives the royal feast;

Mille modi: nam picta potes multa addere veris,
Et petere hinc illinc variarum semina rerum.
Nonne vides, ut nostra Deos in praelia ducant,
Hos Teucris, alios Danais socia arma ferentes,
Certantesque inter se odiis, donec pater ipse
Concilium vocet, atque ingentes molliat iras?
Cum secura tamen penitus natura Deorum
Degat, et aspectu nostro summota quiescat.
Addunt infernasque domos, regna invia vivis,
Tartareosque lacus, Ditemque, et Erinnyas atras.
Tum volucrum captant cantus, atque omina pennae:
Saepe etiam hospitibus convivia leta receptis,
Regalesque canunt epulas, ubi multa repostis
Narratur dapibus vario sermone vicissim.
Or at the glorious hero’s tomb we read
Of games ordained in honor of the dead.
And oft for mercies in old times displayed,
To their own gods their annual rites are paid;
For monstrous Python slain, their praises rise,
And lift the fame of Phoebus to the skies;
In hymns Alcides’ labors they resound,
While Cacus lies extended on the ground,
Alternate sing the labors of his hands,
Enjoined by fierce Eurystheus’ stern commands;
The den of Cacus crowns the grateful strain,
Where the grim monster breathes his flames in vain.

Mark how sometimes the bard without control
Exerts his fire, and pours forth all his soul;
His lines so daring, and his words so strong,
We see the subject figured in the song:
When with the winds old ocean he deforms,
Or paints the rage and horrors of the storms;
Or drives on pointed rocks the bursting ships,
Tossed on the Euxine, or Sicilian deeps;
Or sings the plagues that blast the livid sky,

Nunc ludos celebant magnorum ad busta virorum:
Annua nunc patriis peragunt Diis sacra periclo
Servati quondam, laudesque ad sidera tollunt
Aut Phoebi, monstro ingenti Pythone perempto,
Aut magni Alcidae, Cacum ut videre jacentem:
Rege sub Eurystheo tulerit quos ille labores
Alterni repetunt cantu: super omnia Caci
Speluncam adiacuint, spirantemque ignibus ipsum.

An memorem, quandoque omnes intendere nervos
Cum libuit, verbisque ipsam rem æquare canendo?
Seu dicenda fen tempestas horrida ponti,
Ventorum et rabies, fractæque ad saxa carinae
Aut Siculo angusto, aut impacato Euxino:
Sive coorta repente lues, cum multa ferarum
When beasts by herds, and men by nations die;
Or the fierce flames that Ætna's jaws expire,
Her melted rocks, and deluges of fire,
When from her mouth the bursting vapor flies,
And, charged with ruin, thunders to the skies,
While drifts of smoke in sooty whirlwinds play,
And clouds of cinders stain the golden day.
See! as the poet sounds the dire alarms,
Calls on the war, and sets the hosts in arms,
Squadrons on squadrons driven, confusedly die,
Grim Mars in all his terrors strikes the eye;
More than description rising to the sight,
Presents the real horrors of the fight.
A new creation seems our praise to claim
(Hence Greece derives the sacred poet's name);
The dreadful clang of clashing arms we hear;
The agonizing groan, the fruitless prayer,
And shrieks of suppliants thicken on the ear.
Who, when he reads a city stormed, forbears
To feel her woes, and sympathize in tears?
When o'er the palaces the flames aspire

Corpora, multa hominum leto data: sive Sicana
Dicendum quantis terra tonet Ætna ruinis,
Prorumpens atram cœli usque ad sidera nubem,
Turbine fumantem piceo, et candente favilla.
Vidisti cum bella canunt horrentia, et arma,
Arma fremunt, miscentque equitum peditumque ruinas;
Ante oculos Martis sese offert tristis imago,
Non tantum ut dici videantur, sed fieri res,
Unde ipsis nomen Graii fecere poetis:
Armorum fragor audiri, gemitusque cadentum,
Cædentumque ictus, et inania vota precantum.
Quis quoque, cum captas evolvunt hostibus urbes,
Temperet a lachrymis? tectorum ad culmina sævas
Ire faces, passimque domos involvere flammas
From wall to wall, and wrap the domes in fire;
The sire, with years and hostile rage oppressed;
The starting infant clinging to the breast.
The trembling mother runs, with piercing cries,
Through friends and foes, and shrieking rends the skies;
Dragged from the altar, the distracted fair
Beats her white breast, and tears her golden hair;
Here in thick crowds the vanquished fly away,
There the proud victors heap the wealthy prey,
With rage relentless ravage their abodes,
Nor spare the sacred temples of the gods.
O'er the whole town they run with wild affright,
Tumultuous haste, and violence of flight.

Why should I mention how our souls aspire,
Lost in the raptures of the sacred fire?
For even the soul not always holds the same,
But knows at different times a different frame;
Whether with rolling seasons she complies,
Turns with the Sun, or changes with the skies;
Or through long toil, remissive of her fires,
Droops with the mortal frame her force inspires;

Cernere erit, trepidosque senes, puerosque parentes
Amplexos, flentesque ipsas ad sidera matres
Tollentes clamorem, hostes interque suosque:
Abstractasque nurus adytis, arisque Deorum,
Et crinem laniare, et pectora tundere palmis:
Hos fugere, ast illos ingentem abducere prædam,
Perque domos perque alta ruunt delubra Deorum,
Atque huc atque illuc tota discurretur urbe.

Quid cum animis sacer est furor additus, atque potens vis?
Nam variant species animorum, et pectora nostra
Nunc hos, nunc illos, multo discrimine, motus
Concipiunt; seu quod cæli mutatur in horas
Tempestatibus, hominumque simul quoque pectora mutant;
Seu quia non iudem respondent sæpe labore
Sensus effœti, atque animus cum corpore languet;
Or that our minds alternately appear
Now bright with joy, and now o'ercast with care.
No! but the gods, the immortal gods supply
The glorious fires; they speak the deity.
Then blest is he who waits the auspicious nod,
The warmth divine, and presence of the god;
Who his suspended labors can restrain,
Till Heaven's serene indulgence smiles again.
But strive, on no pretence, against your power,
Till time brings back the voluntary hour.
Sometimes their verdant honors leave the woods,
And their dry urns defraud the thirsty floods;
Nor still the rivers a full channel yield,
Nor Spring with flowery beauties paints the field:
The bards no less such fickle changes find;
Damped is the noble ardor of the mind;
Their wonted toil her wearied powers refuse;
Their souls grow slack and languid to the Muse,
Deaf to their call, their efforts are withstood;
Round their cold hearts congeals the freezing blood.

Seu quia curarum interdum, vacuique doloris;
Interdum tristes cæco intus tundimur æstu.
Dii potius nostris ardorem hunc mentibus addunt,
Dii potius: felixque ideo qui tempora vivit,
Adventumque Dei, et sacram expectare calorem,
Paulisperque operi posito subducere mentem,
Mutati donec redeat clementia cæli.
Sponte sua veniet justum (ne accersite) tempus.
Interdum et sylvis frondes, et fontibus humor
Desunt, nec victis semper cava flumina ripis
Plena fluunt, nec semper agros ver pingit apricos.
Sors eadem incertis contingit sæpe poetis.
Interdum exhauste languent ad carmina vires,
Absumptusque vigor, studiorumque immemor est mens;
Torpescunt sensus; circum præcordia sanguis
Stat gelidus; credas penitus migrasse Camœnas,
You'd think the Muses fled; the god no more
Would fire the bosom where he dwelt before,
No more return. How often, though in vain,
The poet would renew the wonted strain,
Nor sees the gods who thwart his fruitless care,
Nor angry Heaven relentless to his prayer!
Some read the ancient bards, of deathless fame,
And from their raptures catch the noble flame
By just degrees; they feed the glowing vein,
And all the immortal ardor burns again
In its full light and heat; the Sun's bright ray
Thus (when the clouds disperse) restores the day.
Whence shot this sudden flash that gilds the pole?
The god, the god comes rushing on his soul,
Fires with ethereal vigor every part,
Through every trembling limb he seems to dart,
Works in each vein, and swells his rising heart;
Deep in his breast the heavenly tumult plays,
And sets his mounting spirits on a blaze.

Notaque nunquam ipsum rediturum in pectora Phœbum:
Nil adeo Muse, nil subvenit auctor Apollo.
Ah! quoties aliquis frustra consueta retentat
Munera, nec cernit cœlum se tendere contra,
Adversosque Deos, atque implacabile numen!
Quidam autem inventus, qui sæpe reduceret auras
Optatas veterum cantando carmina vatum,
Paulatimque animo blandum invitaret amorem,
Donec collectæ vires, animique refecti,
Et rediit vigor ille, velut post nubila et imbres
Sol micat æthereus: unde haec tam clara repente
Tempestas? Deus ecce! Deus jam corda fatigat,
Altius insinuat venis, penitusque per artus
Diditur, atque faces sævas sub pectore versat.
Nec se jam capiit acer agens calor, igneaeque intus
Vis sævit, totoque agitat se corpore numen.
Ille autem exultans jactat jam non sua verba,
Nor can the raging flames themselves contain,
For the whole god descends into the man;
He quits mortality, he knows no bounds,
But sings inspired in more than human sounds,
Nor from his breast can shake the immortal load,
But pants and raves impatient of the god;
And, rapt beyond himself, admires the force
That drives him on reluctant to the course.
He calls on Phœbus, by the god oppressed
Who breathes excessive spirit in his breast;
No force of thirst or hunger can control
The fierce, the ruling transport of his soul.
Oft in their sleep, inspired with rage divine,
Some bards enjoy the visions of the Nine —
Visions themselves with due applause may crown,
Visions that Phœbus or that Jove may own;
To such a height the god exalts the flame,
And so unbounded is their thirst of fame.

But here, ye youths, exert your timely care,
Nor trust the ungovernable rage too far;
Use not your fortune, nor unfurl your sails,
Though softly courted by the flattering gales;

Oblitusque hominem mirum sonat: haud potis ignem
Excutere, invitus miratur se ire, rapique
Præcipitem, te, Phœbe, vocans, te, Phœbe, prementem
Vociferans, plenusque Deo, stimulisque subactus
Haud placidis; non ille dapum, non ille quietis
Aut somni memor, hanc potis est deponere curam.
Sæpe etiam in somnis memores Phœbeia versant
Munera, et inventi quidam qui sæpe sopore
In medio Musis cecinere et Apolline digna.
Tantus amor famæ, præsentis tanta Dei vis!
Ne tamen ah! nimium, puer o ne fide calori:
Non te fortuna semper permittimus uti,
Præsentique aura, sævum dum pectore numen
Refuse them still, and call your judgment in,
While the fierce god exults and reigns within.
To reason's standard be your thoughts confined,
Let judgment calm the tempest of the mind;
Indulge your heat with conduct, and restrain,
Learn when to draw, and when to give, the rein;
But always wait till the warm raptures cease,
And lull the tumults of the soul to peace;
Then, nor till then, examine strictly o'er
What your wild sallies might suggest before.

Be sure from Nature never to depart;
To copy Nature is the task of art.
The noblest poets own her sovereign sway,
And ever follow where she leads the way.
From her the different characters they trace,
That mark the human or the savage race,
Each various and distinct. In every stage
They paint mankind — their humors, sex, and age.
They show what manners the slow sage become,
What the brisk youth in all his sprightly bloom;

Insidet: at potius ratioque, et cura resistat.
Fræno siste furentem animum, et sub signa vocato,
Et premere, et laxas scito dare cautus habenas.
Atque ideo semper tunc expectare jubemus
Dum fuerint placati animi, compressus et omnis
Impetus: hic recolens sedato corde revise
Omnia, quae caecus menti subjecerit ar dor.

Præterea haud lateat te nil conariar artem,
Naturam nisi ut assimulet, propriusque sequatur.
Hanc unam vates sibi proposueræ magistram:
Quicquid agunt, hujus semper vestigia servant.
Hinc varios moresque hominum, moresque animantium,
Aut studia imparibus diversa etatibus apta
Effingunt facie verborum, et imagine reddunt
Quæ tardosque senes deceant, juvenesque virentes,
In every word and sentiment explain
How the proud monarch differs from the swain.
I nauseate all confounded characters,
Where young Telemachus too grave appears,
Or reverend Nestor acts beneath his years.
The poet suits his speeches, when he sings,
To proper persons and the state of things;
On each their just distinctions are bestowed,
To mark a male, a female, or a god.
Thus when in Heaven seditious tumults rise,
Amongst the radiant senate of the skies,
The sire of gods and sovereign of mankind
In a few words unfolds his sacred mind.
Not so fair Venus, who at large replies,
And pities Troy, and counts her miseries,
Woes undeserved. But with contention fired,
And with the spirit of revenge inspired,
Fierce Juno storms amidst the blest abodes,
And stuns with loud complaints the listening gods.

Fœmineumque genus, quantum quoque rura colenti,
Aut famulo distet regum alto e sanguine cretus.
Nam mihi non placeat, teneros si sit gravis annos
Telemachus supra, senior si Nestor inani
Gaudeat et ludo, et canibus, pictsive pharetris.
Et quoniam in nostro multi persepe loquuntur
Carmine, verba illis pro conditione virorum
Aut rerum damus, et proprii tribuuntur honores,
Cuique suus, seu mas, seu fœmina, sive Deus sit.
Semper enim summus Divum pater atque hominum rex
Ipse in concilio fatur, si forte coorta
Seditio, paucis: at non Venus aurea contra
Pauca refert, Teucrum indignos miserata labores.
Ingreditur furiis, atque alta silentia rumpit,
Acta furore gravi, Juno, ac foeta usque querelis.
Cumque etiam juveni gliscat violentia major,
When youthful Turnus the stern combat claims,
His rising heart is filled with martial flames;
Impelled by rage, and bent to prove his might,
His soul springs forward, and prevents the fight;
Roused to revenge, his kindling spirits glow,
Confirm his challenge, and provoke the foe,
The fugitive of Troy. But while his rage
And youthful courage prompts him to engage,
On Latium's king incumbent it appears,
Grown old in prudence, piety, and years,
To weigh events and youthful heat assuage,
With the cold caution and the fears of age.
In Dido's various character is seen
The furious lover and the gracious queen:
When Troy's famed chief, commanded from above,
Prepares to quit her kingdom and her love,
She raves, she storms with unavailing care,
Grown wild with grief, and frantic with despair;
Through every street she flies, with anguish stung,
And broken accents flutter on her tongue;
Her words confused and interrupted flow,
Speak and express the hurry of her woe.

Ardens cui virtus, animusque in pectore præsens,
Nulla mora in Turno, nec dicta animosa retractat: 480
Stat conferre manum, et certamine provocat hostem,
Desertorem Asiae: verum quantum ille feroci
Virtute exuperat, tanto est impensius æquum
Et pietate gravem, et sedato corde Latinum
Consulere, atque omnes metuentem expendere casus. 485
Multum etiam intererit, Didone irata loquatur,
An pacato animo; Libycas si linquire terras
Trojanus paret, et desertum fallere amorem,
Sæviet, ac tota passim bacchabitur urbe,
Mentis inops, immanis, atrox verba aspera rumpet 490
Confusasque dabit voces, incertaque, et ances
How in this Dido is that Dido lost,
Who late received the Trojans on her coast,
And bade them banish grief, and share her throne,
Dismiss their fears, and think her realms their own!

Next the great orators consult, and thence
Draw all the moving turns of eloquence:
That Sinon may his Phrygian foes betray,
And lead the crowd, as fraud directs the way;
That wise Ulysses may the Greeks detain,
While Troy yet stood, from measuring back the main.
Need I name Nestor, who could talk to peace,
With melting words, the factious kings of Greece,
Whose soft address their fury could control,
Mold every passion, and subdue the soul?
These soothing arts to Venus sure were known,
To beg immortal arms to grace her son;
Her injured spouse each thrilling word inspires,
With every pang of love to second her desires;
With nicest art the fair adulteress draws
Her fond addresses from a distant cause,

Quae quibus anteferat; quantum ah! distabit ab illa
Didone, except Teucros quae nuper egentes,
Solve ver corde metum, atque jubens secludere curas,
Invitantque suis vellent considere regnis!

Nec te oratores pizeat, artisque magistros
Consuluisse, Sinon Phrygios quo fallere possit
Arte, dolis quocunque animos impellere doctus;
Quove tenere queat Graios fandi autor Ulysses
Stante domum Troja tandem discedere certos.

Quid tibi nunc dulcem prae cunctis Nestora dicam,
Qui toties inter primores Argivorum
Ingentes potuit verbis componere lites,
Et mulcere animos, et mollia fingere corda?

Artibus his certe Cytherea instructa, dolisque,
Arma rogat nato genitrix, et adultera laesum
Vulcanum alloquitur, dictisque aspirat amorem.
And all her guileful accents are designed
To catch his passions and ensnare his mind.
'Tis hence the poet learns in every part
To bend the soul, and give with wondrous art
A thousand different motions to the heart;
Hence, as his subject gay or sad appears,
He claims our joy or triumphs in our tears.
Who, when he sees how Orpheus' sorrows flow,
Weeps not his tears, and answers woe for woe?
When he his dear Eurydice deplores
To the deaf rocks and solitary shores,
With the soft harp the bard relieves his pain;
For thee, when morning dawns, prolongs the strain,
For thee, when Phoebus seeks the seas again.
Or when the young Euryalus is killed,
And rolls in death along the bloody field;
Like some fair flower beneath the share he lies,
His head declined, and drooping as he dies;
The reader's soul is touched with generous woe,
He longs to rush with Nisus on the foe;

Nam causas petit ex alto indepensa, virique
Circuit occulta verborum indagine mentem.
Discitur hinc etenim sensus mentesque legentum
Flectere, diversosque animis motus dare, ut illis
Imperet arte potens, dictu mirabile, vates.
Nam semper, seu leeta canat, seu tristia moerens,
Affectas implet tacita dulcedine mentes.
Quem non Threicii quondam sors aspera vatis
Molliat, amissam dum solo in littore secum,
Eurydice, solans aegrum testudine amorem,
Te, veniente die, te, decedente, vocaret?
Quid? puer Euryalus cum pulchros volvitur artus,
Ad dolor! inque humeros lapsa cervice recumbens
Languescit moriens, ceu flos succisus aratro;
Ardet adire animus lectori, et currere in ipsum
He burns with friendly pity to the dead,
To raise the youth, and prop his sinking head,
And strives in vain to stop the gushing blood,
That stains his bosom with a purple flood.

But if the bard such images pursues
That raise the blushes of the virgin muse,
Let them be slightly touched and ne’er expressed,
Give but a hint and let us guess the rest.
If Jove commands the gathering storms to rise,
And with deep thunders rends the vaulted skies,
To the same cave together may repair
The Trojan hero and the Tyrian fair—
The poet’s modesty must add no more.
Enough that Earth had given the sign before,
The conscious ether was with flames o’erspread,
The nymphs ran shrieking round the mountain’s head.
Nor let young Troilus, unhappy boy,
Meet fierce Achilles in the plains of Troy,
But show the unequal youth’s untimely fall
To great Æneas on the Tyrian wall;

Volscentem, puerique manum supponere mento
Labenti, ac largum frustra prohibere cruorem
Purpureo niveum signantem flumine pectus.
Postremo, tibi siqua instant dicenda, ruborem
Quae tenerum incuterent Musis adaperta, chorisque
Virgineis, molli vel præterlabere tactu
Dissimulans, vel verte alios, et rem suffice factam.
Si pater omnipotens tonitru coelum omne ciebit,
Speluncam Dido, dux et Trojanus eandem
Deveniant: pudor ulterior nihil addere curet.
Nam sat erit, Tellus quod prima, et conscius Æther
Connubii dent signum, ululentque in vertice Nymphae.
Neve aliis, impar nimium, ne Troilus armis
Ah! puer infelix facito concurrat Achilli,
Quam quibus in Libyco conspexit littore pictum
Supine and hanging from his empty car,
Dragged by his panting coursers through the war.
Thus from our bright examples you may trace,
To write with judgment, decency, and grace;
From others learn invention to increase,
And search in chief the glorious sons of Greece;
For her bright treasures Argos' realms explore,
Bring home triumphant all her gathered store,
And with her spoils enrich the Latian shore.
Nor is the glory of translation less,
To give the Grecian bards a Roman dress—
If Phoebus' gracious smiles the labor crown—
Than if some new invention were your own.
Mincio's and Manto's glorious son behold,
The immortal Virgil, sheathed in foreign gold,
Shines out unshamed, and towers above the rest,
In the rich spoils of godlike Homer dressed.
Let Greece in triumph boast that she imparts
To Latium's conquering realms her glorious arts,

Illum Anchisiades heros, dum victus anhelis
Fertur equis, currusque hæret resupinus inani:
Nec puere veros congressus dicere cures.
Quid debeat, quid non, tibi nostri ostendere possunt:
Inventa ex aliis disce, et te plurima Achivos
Consulere hortamur veteres, Argivaque regna
Explorare oculus, et opimam avertere gaza
In Latium, atque domum laetum spolia ampla referre.
Haud minor est adeo virtus, si te audit Apollo,
Inventa Argivum in patriam convertere vocem,
Quam si tute aliquid intactum inveneris ante.
Aspice ut insignis peregrino incedat in auro
Fatidicæ Mantus, et Minici filius amnis!
Fulgeat ut magni exuvias indutus Homerī!
Nec pudet. Egregias artes ostenderit, esto,
Græcia, tradiderit Latio præclara reperta,
Dum post in melius aliunde accepta Latini
While Latium’s sons improve her best designs,
Till by degrees each polished labor shines,
While Rome advances now in arts, as far
Above all cities, as of old in war.
Ye gods of Rome, ye guardian deities,
Who lift our nation’s glory to the skies,
And thou, Apollo, the great source of Troy,
Let Rome at least this single palm enjoy,
To shine in arts supreme, as once in power,
And teach the nations she subdued before,
Since discord all Ausonia’s kings alarms,
And clouds the ancient glories of her arms.
In our own breasts we sheath the civil sword,
Our country naked to a foreign lord;
Which lately, prostrate, started from despair,
Burned with new hopes, and armed her hands for war,
But armed in vain. The inexorable hate
Of envious Fortune called her to her fate;
Insatiate in her rage, her frowns oppose
The Latian fame, and woes are heaped on woes.

Omnia rettulerint, dum longe maxima Roma
Ut belli studiis, ita doctis artibus omnes,
Quot Sol cuncte videt terrarum, anteiverit urbes.
Dii Romae indigetes, Troiae tuque autor, Apollo,
Unde genus nostrum coeli se tollit ad astra,
Hanc saltem auferri laudem prohibete Latinis:
Artibus emineat semper, studiisque Minervae
Italia, et gentes doceat pulcherrima Roma;
Quandoquidem armorum penitus fortuna recessit,
Tanta Italos inter crevit discordia reges.
Ipsi nos inter sævos distingimusenses,
Nec patriam pudet externis aperire tyrannis.
Spes tamen Italiæ prostratae affulserat ingen
Nuper, et egregiis animos erexerat ausis:
Heu frustra! invidit laudi fors læva Latinæ,
Our dread alarms each foreign monarch took,
Through all their tribes the distant nations shook,
To Earth's last bounds the fame of Leo runs:
Nile heard, and Indus trembled for his sons,
Arabia heard the Medicean line,
The first of men, and sprung from race divine.
The sovereign priest, and mitred king, appears
With his loved Julius joined, who kindly shares
The reins of empire and the public cares;
To break their country's chains, the generous pair
Concert their schemes and meditate the war.
On Leo Europe's monarchs turn their eyes,
On him alone the western world relies,
And each bold chief attends his dread alarms,
While the proud crescent fades before his arms.
High on his splendid car, immortal Rome,
Thine eyes had seen the holy warrior come,
Lord of the vanquished world, in triumph home;

Necdum fata malis Italum exaturata quierunt.
Jam gentes longe positae trepidare, ducesque
Externi: jam dives Arabs, jam Nilus, et Indus
Audierant longe Tusci decora alta Leonis,
Audierant Medicumque genus, stirpemque Deorum:
Jam tum ille egregias curas accinxerat ardens
Pro patriae decore, pro libertate sepulta
Antiquae Ausoniae, germano fretus Iulo,
Quicum partitus curarum ingentia semper
Pondera commissas rerum tractabat habenas
Idem regnatorque hominum, Divumque sacerdos.
Jamque illum Europae reges, gensque omnis in unum
Conversique oculos, conversique ora tenebant:
Jamque duces animis illum concordibus omnes
Velle sequi trepido in Turcas arma parantem.
Illum quadrijugis invectum per moenia curru,
Roma, triumphato vidisses protinus orbe:
Illum, Tybri pater, lactanti spumeus alveo
Thy streams, old Tiber, swelled with conscious pride,
Had borne thy kindred warrior down thy tide,
While, crowded up in heaps, thy waves admire
The captive nations, and their strange attire.
Behind his wheels should march a numerous train
Of sceptred slaves, reluctant to the chain,
Forget their haughty threats, and boast in vain;
Though the proud foe, of Jewry's realm possessed,
Has spread his wide dominion through the East,
Sees his dread standard there at large unfurled,
And grasps in thought the empire of the world,
And now, ye gods! increased in barbarous power,
His armies hover o'er the Hesperian shore.
To see the passing pomp, the ravished throng
Through every street should flow in tides along;
The sacred father, as the numbers rolled,
Should his dear citizens again behold,
High o'er the shouting crowds enthroned in gold;
Should show the trophies of his glorious toils,
And hang the shrines with consecrated spoils;
Piles of barbaric gold should glitter there,
The wealth of kingdoms and the pomp of war.

Exciperes, Tuscus Tuscum, veheresque per undas
Miratas habituque novos, hominumque figuras.
Issent post currus capti longo ordine reges:
Oblitusque minas minor iret barbarus hostis,
Qui victis Solymis nunc, atque oriente subacto
Exultat fidens, orbisque affectat habenas
Efferus, atque Italæ jam jam, scelus! imminet ore.
Visendi studio passim Romana juventus
Per fora, perque vias, festa discurreret urbe.
Ipse suos solio fulgens pater aureus alto
Aspiceret cives longo post tempore visos;
Barbaricumque aurum, prædæque juberet acervos
Sacratis adytis, penitusque alta arce reponi.
But, by your crime, ye gods, our hopes are crossed,
And those imaginary triumphs lost;
Interred with Leo, in one fatal hour.
Our prospects perished, as they lived before.

Verum heu! Dii, vestrum crimen! spes tanta repente
Italie absumptha, ac penitus fiducia cessit!
Egregius moriens heros secum omnia vertit!
BOOK III.

WHAT style, what language, suits the poet's lays,
To claim Apollo's and the Muses' praise,
I now unfold. To this last bound I tend,
And see my promised labors at an end.
First then, with care a just expression choose,
Led by the kind indulgence of the Muse
To dress up every subject when you write,
And set all objects in a proper light.
But lest the distant prospect of the goal
Should damp your vigor and your strength control,
Rouse every power, and call forth all the soul.
See how the Nine the panting youth invite,
With one loud voice to reach Parnassus' height!
See how they hold aloft the immortal crown,
To urge the course, and call the victor on!
See from the clouds each lavish goddess pours,
Full o'er thy head, a sudden spring of flowers,
And roses fall in odoriferous showers;

NUNC autem linguae studium, moremque loquendi,
Quem vates, Musaeque probent, atque autor Apollo,
Expediam, curam extremam, finemque laborum.
Discendum indicia, et verborum lumina quae sint
Munere Pieridum lustrandis addita rebus.
Ne te, opere incepto, deterreat ardua meta;
Audendum, puer, atque invicto pectore agendum.
Jam te Pierides summa en! de rupe propinquum
Voce vocant, viridique ostentant fronde coronam
Victori, atque animo stimulos hortatibus addunt.
Jamque rosas calathis spargunt per nubila plenis
Desuper, et florum placido te plurima nimbo.
Celestial scents in balmy breezes fly,
And shed ambrosial spirits from the sky!
In chief, avoid obscurity, nor shroud
Your thoughts and dark conceptions in a cloud;
For some, we know, affect to shun the light,
Lost in forced figures and involved in night;
Studious and bent to leave the common way,
They skulk in darkness and abhor the day.
Oh, may the sacred Nine inspire my lays
To shine with pride in their own native rays!
For this we need not importune the skies—
In our own power and will the blessing lies.
Expression, boundless in extent, displays
A thousand forms, a thousand several ways;
In different garbs from different quarters brought,
It makes unnumbered dresses for a thought—
Such vast varieties of hues we find
To paint conception, and unfold the mind!
If e'er you toil, but toil without success,
To give your images a shining dress,

Tempestas operit, gratumque effusus odorem
Ambrosiae liquor aspirat, divina voluptas.

Verborum in primis tenebras fuge, nubilaque atra;
Nam neque (si tantum fas credere) defuit olim,
Qui, lumen jucundum ultro, lumemque perosus,
Obscurum nebulæ se circumfudit amictu:
Tantus amor noctis, latebre tam dira cupidó.
Ille ego sim, cui Pierides dent carmina Musæ
Lumine clara suo, externæ nihil indiga lucis.
Nec tamen id votis optandum denique magnis:
Ipse volens per te poteris; vis Dædala fandi
Tot se adeo in facies, tot se convertit in ora,
Mille trahens varia secum ratione colores.
Mille modis aperire datur mentisque latebras,
Quique latent tacito arcani sub pectore motus.
Si jibi, dum trepidas, non hac successerit, et lux
Quit your pursuit and choose a different way,
Till, breaking forth, the voluntary ray
Cuts the thick darkness and lets down the day.
Since then a thousand forms you may pursue,
A thousand figures rising to the view,
Unless confined and straitened in your scheme,
With the short limits of a scanty theme,
From these to those with boundless freedom pass,
And to each image give a different face;
The readers hence a wondrous pleasure find,
That charms the ear and captivates the mind.
In this the laws of Nature we obey,
And act as her example points the way,
Which has on every different species thrown
A shape distinct, and figure of its own;
Man differs from the beast that haunts the woods,
The bird from every native of the floods.
See how the poet banishes with grace
A native term to give a stranger place!

Non datur hinc, te verte alio, lumenque require
Nunc hac, nunc illac, donec diffusierit ultero,
Claraque tempestas coelo radiarit aperto.
Quin etiam, angustis si non urgebere rebus,
Cum fandi tibi mille viæ, tibi mille figuræ
Occurrent, tu mille vias, tu mille figuræ,
Nunc hanc, nunc aliam ingredere, et mutare memento,
Jamque hos jamque alios haud segnis sumere vultus.
Nempe inde illectas aures immensa voluptas
Detinet, et dulci pertentat pectora motu.
Ergo omnem curam impendunt, ut cernere nusquam
Sit formas similes, natureæ exempla sequuti,
Dissimili quod sint facie quæcunque sub astris
Vitales carpunt auras, genus omne ferarum
Atque hominum, pictæ voluces, mutæque natantes.
Nonne vides, verbis ut veris sæpe relictis
From different images with just success
He clothes his matter in the borrowed dress;
The borrowed dress the things themselves admire,
And wonder whence they drew the strange attire;
Proud of their ravished spoils, they now disclaim
Their former color and their genuine name,
And, in another garb more beauteous grown,
Prefer the foreign habit to their own.
Oft as he paints a battle on the plain,
The battle's imaged by the roaring main;
Now he the fight a fiery deluge names,
That pours along the fields a flood of flames;
In airy conflict now the winds appear,
Alarm the deeps and wage the stormy war;
To the fierce shock the embattled tempests pour,
Waves charge on waves, the encountering billows roar.
Thus in a varied dress the subject shines;
By turns the objects shift their proper signs;
From shape to shape alternately they run,
To borrow others' charms, and lend their own;

Accersant simulata, aliundeque nomina porro
Transportent, aptentque aliis ea rebus, ut ipsae
Exuviasque novas, res insolitosque colores
Indutae sepe externi mirentur amictus
Unde illi, lactaeque aliena luce fruantur,
Mutatoque habitu, nec jam sua nomina mallent?
Saepe ideo, cum bella canunt, incendia credas
Cernere, diluviumque ingens, surgentibus undis.
Contra etiam Martis pugnas imitatitur ignis,
Cum fuit accensis acies Vulcanae campis.
Nec turbato oritur quondam minor aequore pugna:
Confligunt animosi Euri certamine vasto
Inter se, pugnantque adversis molibus undae.
Usque adeo passim sua res insignia lactae
Permutantque, juvantque vicissim, et mutua sese
Altera in alterius transformat protinus ora.
Pleased with the borrowed charms, the readers find
A crowd of different images combined
Rise from a single object to the mind.
So the pleased traveler from a mountain's brow
Views the calm surface of the seas below;
Though wide beneath the floating ocean lies
The first immediate object of his eyes,
He sees the forests tremble from within,
And gliding meadows paint the deeps with green,
While to his eyes the fair delusions pass
In gay succession through the watery glass.
'Tis thus the bard diversifies his song;
Now here, now there, he calls the soul along;
The rich variety he sets to sight
Cloys not the mind, but adds to our delight.
Now with a frugal choice the bard affords
The strongest light and energy of words;
While humble subjects he contrives to raise
With borrowed splendors and a foreign blaze.
This, if on old tradition we rely,
Was once the current language of the sky,

Tum specie capti gaudent spectare legentes;
Nam diversa simul datur et re cernere eadem
Multarum simulachra animo subeuntia rerum.
Ceu cum forte olim placidi liquidissima ponti
Æquora vicina aspectat de rupe viator,
Tantum illi subjecta oculis est mobilis unda;
Ille tamen sylvas, interque virentia prata
Inspiciens miratur, aquae quæ purior humor
Cuncta refert, captosque eludit imagine visus.
Non alter vates nunc huc traducere mentes,
Nunc illuc, animisque legentum apponere gaudet
Diversas rerum species, dum tædia vitat.
Res humiles ille interea non secius effert,
Splendore illustrans alieno, et lumine vestit,
Verborumque simul vitat dispensia parcus.
Which first the Muses brought to these abodes,
Who taught mankind the secrets of the gods;
For in the court of Jove their choirs advance,
And sing alternate, as they lead the dance,
Mixed with the gods; they hear Apollo’s lyre,
And from high Heaven the panting bard inspire.
Nor bards alone, but other writers reach
This bold, this daring privilege of speech;
In chief the orators, to raise their sense,
In this strong figure dress their eloquence,
When with persuasive strokes they plead a cause,
And bridle vice, and vindicate the laws;
Or on the dreadful verge of death defend,
And snatch from fate, a poor devoted friend.
Even the rough hinds delight in such a strain,
When the glad harvest waves with golden grain,
And thirsty meadows drink the pearly rain;
On the proud vine her purple gems appear,

Hunc fandi morem, si vera audivimus, ipsi
Celicolarum exercent coeli in penetralibus altis,
Pieridum chorus in terras quem detulit olim,
Atque homines docuere Deum praecipra reperta.
Ille etenim Jovis ætherea dicuntur in aula
Immixtæ Superis festas agitare choreas,
Et semper canere alternæ, Phoebique fruuntur
Colloquio, vatumque inspirant pectora ab alto.
Nec tamen haud solis fugit hæc me nota poetis,
Verum etiam autores alii experiuntur, et audent,
Præcipue orantes causas, fandique magistri,
Seu sones tendant legum compescere habenis,
Seu caros cupiant atri e mortis amicos
Faucibus eripere, et deletos reddere luci.
Quin etiam agricolas ea fandi nota voluptas
Exercit, dum læta seges, dum trudere gemmas
Incipient vites, sitientiaque ætheris imbrem
The smiling fields rejoice, and hail the pregnant year.
First from necessity the figure sprung;
For things that would not suit our scanty tongue,
When no true names were offered to the view,
Those they transferred that bordered on the true;
Thence by degrees the noble license grew;
The bards those daring liberties embraced,
Through want at first, through luxury at last;
They now to alien things, at will, confirm
The borrowed honors of a foreign term.
So man, at first, the rattling storm to fly,
And the bleak horrors of the wintry sky,
Raised up a roof of osiers o'er his head,
And closed with homely clay the slender shed;
Now regal palaces of wondrous size,
With brazen beams, on Parian columns rise
That heave the pompous fabric to the skies.
But other writers sprinkle here and there
These bolder beauties with a frugal care;
So vast a freedom is allowed to none,

Prata bibunt, ridentque, satis surgentibus, agri.
Hanc vulgo speciem propriae penuria vocis
Intulit, indistiquae urges in rebus egestas.
Quippe, ubi se vera ostendebant nomina nusquam,
Fas erat hinc atque hinc transffeare simillima veris.
Paulatim accrevere artes, hominumque libido:
Quodque olim usus inops reperit, nunc ipsa voluptas
Postulat, hunc addens verborum rebus honorem.
Sic homines primum venti vis aspera adegit,
Vitandique imbes, stipulis horrentia tecta
Fonere, et informi sedem arctam claudere limo:
Nunc altae æratis trabibus, Pariiisque columnis
Regisico surgunt ædes ad sidera luxu.
Parcius ista tamen delibant, et minus audent
Artifices alii, nec tanta licentia fandi
Cuique datur, solis vulgo concessa poetis:
But suits the labors of the bard alone,
Who in the laws of verse himself restrains,
Tied up to time in voluntary chains.
Others, by no restraint or stop withheld,
May range the compass of a wider field;
The sacred poets, who their labors fill
With pleasing fictions, or with truths at will,
Their thoughts in bolder liberties express,
Which look more beauteous in a foreign dress.
To all, unusual colors they impart,
Nor blush if e’er detected in their art.
Sometimes beyond the bounds of truth they fly,
And boldly lift their subject to the sky,
When with tumultuous shouts the Heavens rebound,
And all Olympus trembles with the sound;
Or with repeated accents they relate
The fall of Troy, and dwell upon her fate:
‘Oh sire! Oh country, once with glory crowned!
Oh wretched race of Priam, once renowned!
Oh Jove! see Ilion smoking on the ground!’
They now name Ceres for the golden grain,

Nempe pedum hi duris cohibentur legibus, et se
Sponte sua spatiis angusti temporis arctant:
Liberius fas campum aliis decurrere apertum.
Saci igitur vates, facta atque infecta canentes,
Libertate palam gaudent majore loquendi,
Quæsitique decent cultus magis, atque colores
Insoliti, nec erit tanto ars deprensa pudori.

Crebrius hi fando gaudent super æthera miris
Tollere res (nec sit fas tantum credere) dictis;
It coelo clamor, tremit omnis murmure Olympus.
Nec mora, bis vocem ingeminant, urbisque ruinas,
Fataque, præliaque, et sortem execrantur iniquam,
O pater! o patria! o Priami domus inclyta quondam!
Clamantes, cecidit, pro Jupiter! Ilion ingens.
Bacchus for wine, and Neptune for the main;
Or from the father's name point out the son;
Or for her people introduce a town:
So when alarmed her natives dread their fates,
Pale Afric shakes, and trembles through her states;
And some, by Acheloüs' streams alone,
Comprise the floods of all the world in one.

Lo! now they start aside, and change the strain
To fancied converse with an absent swain;
To grots and caverns all their cares disclose,
Or tell the solitary rocks their woes;
To scenes inanimate proclaim their love,
Talk with a hill, or whisper to a grove.
On you they call, ye unattentive woods,
And wait an answer from your bordering floods.

Sometimes they speak one thing, but leave behind
Another secret meaning in the mind;
A fair expression artfully dispense,
But use a word that clashes with the sense:

Quid cum Neptunum dicunt mare, vina Lyæum,
Et Cererem frumenta, patrumque e nomine natos
Significant, memorantque urbes pro civibus ipsis?
Atque ideo timor attonitos cum invaserit Afros,
Africa terribili tremit horrida terra tumultu.
Nec deerit tibi, pro fluviiis, proque omnibus undis
Pocula qui pressis Acheloia misceat uvis.

Ecce! autem subitis conversi vocibus ultro
Sæpe aliquem longe absentem, desertaque et antra,
Et solos montes affantur, sœpe salutant
Sylvasque fluoviosque, et agros, sensuque carentes
Speluncas, velut hæc sint responsura vocata,
Et vos o vacui compellant nomine saltus.

Præterea verbis inimicos addere sensus
Oppositis, dum dissimulant, aliudque videbis
Sæpe loqui, atque aliud simulata condere mente.
Egregia interea conjux ita nocte suprema
Thus pious Helen stole the faithful sword,
While Troy was flaming, from her sleeping lord;
So glorious Drances towered amid the plain,
And piled the ground with mountains of the slain,
Immortal trophies raised from squadrons killed,
And with vast spoils ennobled all the field.

But now to mention farther I forbear,
With what strong charms they captivate the ear.
When the same terms they happily repeat,
The same repeated seem more soft and sweet:
This, were Arcadia judge, if Pan withstood,
Pan's judge, Arcadia, would condemn her god.

But though our fond indulgence grants the Muse
A thousand liberties in different views,
Whene'er you choose an image to express
In foreign terms, and scorn the native dress;
Yet be discreet, nor strain the point too far,
Let the transition still unforced appear,
Nor e'er discover an excess of care.
For some, we know, with awkward violence
Distort the subject and disjoint the sense,

Deiphobo fidum capiti subduxerat ensim.
Nec minus insignis Drances cum stragis acervos
Tot dedit, et claris insigniit arva trophaeis.
Quid sequar ulterius, quanta dulcedine captas
Detineant aures, vocem cum rursus eandem
Ingeminant, modo non verborum cogat egestas?
Pan etiam Arcadia neget hoc si judice præsens,
Pan, etiam Arcadia dicam te judice vanum.
Hæc adeo cum sint, cum fas audere poetis
Multa modis multis, tamen observare memento,
Si quando haud propriis rem mavis dicere verbis,
Translatisque aliunde notis, longeque petitis,
Ne nimiam ostendas querendo taliæ curam.
Namque aliqui exercent vim duram, et rebus iniqui
Quite change the genuine figure, and deface
The native shape with every living grace,
And force unwilling objects to put on
An alien face and features not their own.
A low conceit in disproportioned terms
Looks like a boy dressed up in giant's arms:
Blind to the truth, all reason they exceed
Who name a stall the palace of the steed,
Or grass, the tresses of great Rhea's head.
'Tis best sometimes an image to express
In its own colors and its native dress,
The genuine words with happy care to use,
If nicely culled and worthy of the Muse.

Some things alternately compared are shown,
Both names still true, and mutually their own—
But here the least redundance you must shun;
Tell us, in short, from whence the hint you drew,
And set the whole comparison to view,
Lest, mindless of your first design, you seem
To lead the mind away, and rove from theme to theme.

Nativam eripiunt formam, indignantibus ipsis,
Invitasque jubent alienos sumere vultus.
Haud magis imprudens mihi erit, et luminis expers,
Qui puero ingentes habitus det ferre gigantis,
Quam si quis stabula alta lares appellet equinos,
Aut crines magnae genitricis gramina dicat.
Præstiterit vero faciem spilla et sua cuique
Linquere, et interdum propriis rem prodere verbis,
Indiciisque suis, ea sint modo digna Camœnis.

Res etiam poteris rebus conferre vicissim,
Nominibusque ambas verisque suisque vocare;
Quod faciens, fuge verborum dispensia, paucisque
Includas numeris, unde illa simillima imago
Ducitur, et breviter confer, ne forte priorum
Oblitus sermonum alio traducere mentem,
Inque alia ex aliis videare exordia labi.
But now pursue the method that affords
The fittest terms and wisest choice of words.
Not all deserve alike the same regard,
Nor suit the godlike labors of the bard;
For words as much may differ in degree
As the most various kinds of poetry.
Though many a common term and word we find
Dispersed promiscuously through every kind,
Those that will never suit the heroic rage
Might grace the buskin and become the stage.
Their large, their vast variety explore
With piercing eyes, and range the mighty store.
From their deep fund the richest words unfold,
With nicest care be rich expression culled,
To deck your numbers in the purest gold;
The vile, the dark degenerate crowd refuse,
And scorn a dress that would disgrace the Muse.
Then, to succeed your search, pursue the road,
And beat the track the glorious ancients trod;

Jamque age verborum qui sit delectus habendus,
Quae ratio: nam nec sunt omnia versibus apta,
Omnia nec pariter tibi sunt uno ordine habenda.
Versibus ipsa etiam divisa, et carmina quantum
Carminibus distant, tantum distantia verba
Sunt etiam inter se, quamvis communia multa
Interdum invenies versus diffusa per omnes.
Multa decent scenam, quae sunt fugienda canenti
Aut Divum laudes, aut heroum inculyta facta.
Ergo alte vestiga oculis, aciemque voluta
Verborum sylva in magna: tum accommoda Musis
Selige, et insignes vocum depascere honores,
Ut nitidus puro versus tibi fulgeat auro.
Rejice degenerem turbam nil lucis habentem,
Indecoresque notas, ne sit non digna supellex.
Qui fieri id possit veterum te semita vatum
Observata docebit: adi monumenta priorum
To those eternal monuments repair,
There read, and meditate forever there.
If o'er the rest some mighty genius shines,
Mark the sweet charms and vigor of his lines;
As far as Phœbus and the heavenly powers
Smile on your labors, make his diction yours,
Your style by his authentic standard frame,
Your voice, your habit and address, the same.
With him proceed to cull the rest, for there
A full reward will justify your care;
Examine all, and bring from all away
Their various treasures as a lawful prey.
Nor would I scruple, with a due regard,
To read sometimes a rude unpolished bard,
Among whose labors I may find a line,
Which from unsightly rust I may refine,
And, with a better grace, adopt it into mine.
How often may we see a troubled flood
Stained with unsettled ooze and rising mud,

Crebra oculis animoque legens, et multa voluta.
Tum quamvis, longe siquis supereminet omnes,
Virtutem ex illo, ac rationem discere fandi
Te jubeam, cui contendas te reddere semper
Assimilem, atque habitus gressusque effingere euntis,
Quantum fata sinunt, et non aversus Apollo:
Haud tamen interea reliquum explorare labores
Abstiteris vatum, moneo, suspectaque dicta
Sublegere, et variam ex cunctis abducere gazam.
Nec dubitem versus hirsuti sæpe poëti
Suspendus lustrare, et vestigare legendo,
Sicubi se quædam forte inter commoda versu
Dicta meo ostendant, quæ mox melioribus ipse
Auspiciis proprios possim mihi vertere in usus,
Detersa prorsus priscæ rubigine scabra.
Flumina sæpe vides immundo turbida limo;
Which, if a well the bordering natives sink,
Supplies the thirsty multitude with drink;
The trickling stream by just degrees refines,
Till in its course the limpid current shines,
And, taught through secret labyrinths to flow,
Works itself clear among the sands below.
For nothing looks so gloomy, but will shine
From proper care and timely discipline;
If, with due vigilance and conduct, wrought
Deep in the soul, it labors in the thought.
Hence on the ancients we must rest alone,
And make their golden sentences our own;
To cull their best expressions claims our cares,
To form our notions and our styles on theirs.
See how we bear away their precious spoils,
And with the glorious dress enrich our styles,
Their bright inventions for our use convey,
Bring all the spirit of their words away,
And make their words themselves our lawful prey!
Unshamed in other colors to be shown,
We speak our thoughts in accents not our own.
But your design with modest caution weigh,

Haurit aquam tamen inde frequens concursus, et altis
Important puteis ad pocula, desuper illa
Occultis diffusa canalibus influit, omnemque
Illabens bibulas labem exuit inter arenas.
Nil adeo incultum, quod non splendescere possit:
Præcipue si cura vigil non desit, et usque
Mente premas, multumque animo tecum ipse volutes.
Atque ideo ex priscis semper quo more loquamur
Discendum, quorum depascimur aurea dicta,
Præcipuorumque avidi rerum populamus honorem.
Aspice ut exuvias veterumque insignia nobis
Aptemus: rerum accipimus nunc clara reperta,
Nunc seriem atque animum verborum, verba quoque ipsa:
Steal with due care, and meditate the prey,
Invert the order of the words with art,
And change their former site in every part.
Thus win your readers, thus deceive with grace,
And let the expression wear a different face;
Yourself at last, the glorious labor done,
Will scarce discern his diction from your own.
Some, to appear of diffidence bereft,
Steal in broad day, and glory in the theft,
When with just art, design and confidence,
On the same words they graft a different sense,
Preserve the unvaried terms and order too,
But change their former spirit for a new,
Or, with the sense of emulation bold,
With ancient bards a glorious contest hold;
Their richest spoils triumphant they explore,
Which, ranged with better grace, they varnish o'er,
And give them charms they never knew before.
So trees that change their soils more proudly rise,
And lift their spreading honors to the skies;

Nec pudet interdum alterius nos ore loquutos.
Cum vero cultis moliris furtæ poetis,
Cautius ingredere, et raptus memor occulte versis
Verborum indiciis, atque ordine falle legentes
Mutato: nova sit facies, nova prorsus imago.
Munere (nec longum tempus) vix ipse peracto
Dicta recognosces veteris mutata poëtæ.

Sæpe palam quidam rapiunt, cupiuntque videri
Omnibus intrepidi, ac furto lætantur in ipso
Deprensi: seu cum dictis, nihil ordine verso,
Longe alios iisdem sensus mira arte dedere,
Exueruntque animos verborum impune priores:
Seu cum certandi priscis succensa libido;
Et possessa diu, sed enim male condita, victis
Extorquere manu juvat, in meliusque referre:
Ceu fata mutatoque solo felicius olim.
And, when transplanted, nobler fruits produce,
Exalt their nature, and ferment their juice.
So Troy's famed chief the Asian empire bore,
With better omens, to the Latian shore,
Though from thy realm, O Dido, to the sea
Called by the gods reluctantly away,
Nor the first nuptial pleasures could control
The fixed, the stubborn purpose of his soul.
Unhappy queen! thy woes suppressed thy breath;
Thy cares pursued thee, and survived in death;
Had not the Dardan fleet thy kingdom sought,
Thy life had shone unsullied with a fault.

Come then, ye youths, and urge your generous toils;
Come, strip the ancients, and divide the spoils
Your hands have won — but shun the fault of such
Who with fond rashness trust themselves too much.
For some we know, who, by their pride betrayed,
With vain contempt reject a foreign aid,
Who scorn those great examples to obey,

Cernimus ad coelum translatas surgere plantas.
Poma quoque utilius succos oblieta priores
Proveniunt: sic regna Asiae, Trojaeque penates
Transtulit, auspiciis Phrygius melioribus heros
In Latium, quamvis (nam Divum fata vocabant)
Invitus, Phoenissa, tuo de littore cessit,
Nec connubia leta, nec incepti Hymenaei
Flexerunt inimicem animum: tu victa dolore
Occidis, et curae vix ipsa in morte relinquunt.
Numquam o Dardanice tetigisset vestra carinae
Littora, fors nulli poteras succumbere culpæ.
Ergo agite o mecum securi accingite furtis
Una omnes, pueri, passimque avertite predam.
Infelix autem (quidam nam sepe reperti)
Viribus ipse suis temere qui fises, et arti,
Externae quasi opis nihil indigas, abnegat audax
Fida sequi veterum vestigia, dum sibi praeda
Nor follow where the ancients point the way.
While from the theft their cautious hands refrain,
Vain are their fears, their superstition vain,
Nor Phoebus' smiles the unhappy poet crown;
The fate of all his works prevents his own.
Himself his moldering monument survives,
And sees his labors perish while he lives;
His fame is more contracted than his span,
And the frail author dies before the man.
How would he wish the labor to forbear,
And follow other arts with more successful care?

I like a fair allusion nicely wrought,
When the same words express a different thought;
And such a theft true critics dare not blame,
Which late posterity shall crown with fame;
Void of all fear, of every doubt bereft,
I would not blush, but triumph in the theft.
Nor on the ancients for the whole rely,
The whole is more than all their works supply;

Temperat heu! nimium, atque alienis parcere crevit
(Vana superstition!) Phoebi sine numine cura.

Haud longum tales ideo laetantur, et ipsi
Saepe suis superant monumentis, illaudatique
Extremum ante diem foetus flere caducos,
Viventesque suæ viderunt funera famæ.

Quam cuperent v ano potius caruisse labore,
Eque suis alias didicisse parentibus artes!

Sæpe mihi placet antiquis alludere dictis,
Atque aliud longe verbis proferre sub iisdem:
Nec mea tam sapiens per sese prodita quisquam

Furta redarguerit, quœ mox manifesta probabunt
Et nati natorum, et qui nascentur ab illis:
Tantum absit, poenæ metuens insamis ut ipse
Furta velim tegere, atque meas celare rapinas.
Non tamen omnia te priscis fas fidere, qui non Omnia sufficient: querenti pauc a labore
Some things your own invention must explore,
Some virgin images untouched before.
New terms no laws forbid us to induce,
To coin a word, and sanctify to use;
But yet admit no words into the song,
Unless they prove the stock from whence they sprung,
Point out their family, their kindred trace,
And set to view the series of their race.
But where you find your native tongue too poor,
Transport the riches of the Grecian store;
Inform the lump, and work it into grace,
And with new life inspire the unwieldy mass;
Till, changed by discipline, the word puts on
A foreign nature, and forgets its own.
So Latium's language found a rich increase,
And grew and flourished from the wealth of Greece;
Till use in time had rifled Argos' stores
And brought all Athens to the Hesperian shores.
How many words from rich Mycenae come,
Of Greek extraction, in the dress of Rome,
That live with ours, our rights and freedom claim,

Attentanda tuo, nondum ulli audita, supersunt.
Nos etiam quaedam idcirco nova condere nulla
Relligio vetat, indicatasque effundere voces.
Ne vero hæc penitus fuerint ignota, suumque
Agnoscant genus, et cognatam ostendere gentem
Possint, ac stirpis nitantur origine certæ.
Usque adeo patriæ tibi si penuria vocis
Obstant, fas Grajugenum felicibus oris
Devehere informem massam, quam incude Latina
Informans patrium jubeas dediscere morem.
Sic quondam Ausoniae succrèvit copia linguae:
Sic auctum Latium, quo plurima transtulit Argis
Usus, et exhaustis Itali potiuntur Athenis.
Nonne vides mediis ut multa crepta Mycenis,
Graia genus, fulgent nostriis immixta, nec ullum
Their nature different, but their looks the same!
Through Latium's realms in Latium's garb they go,
At once her strangers and her natives too;
Long has her poverty been fled, and long
With native riches has she graced her tongue.
Nor search the poets only, but explore
Immortal Tully's inexhausted store;
And other authors, born in happier days,
Shall answer all your wants, and beautify your lays.

Oft, in old bards, a verse above the rest
Shines, in barbaric spoils and trophies dressed:
Thus Gaul, her victor's triumph to complete,
Supplies those words that paint her own defeat;
And vanquished Macedon, to tell her doom,
Gives up her language with her arms to Rome.
Then can we fear with groundless diffidence
A want of words that shall express our sense?

But, if compelled by want, you may produce
And bring an antiquated word in use,
A word erst well received in days of yore,

Apparet discrimen? eunt insignibus æquis
Undique per Latios et civis et advena tractus.
Jamduodum nostri cessit sermonis egestas:
Raro uber patriæ tibi raro opulentia deerit.
Ipse suis Cicero thesauris omnia promet,
Atoresque alii nati felicibus annis
Omnia sufficient, nec solis crede poetis.

Sæpe etiam vidi veterum inter carmina vatum
Barbarico versus cultu, gazaque superbos;
Belgicaque immisit trans Alpes esseda Gallus
In Latium, et longe Macedum venere sarissæ:
Et meuam ne deficiat me larga supellex
Verborum, angustique premat sermonis egestas?

Quin et victa situ, si me penuria adaxit,
Verba licet renovare, licet tua, sancta vetustas,
Vatibus indugredi sacraria: sæpius olli
A word our old forefathers used before;
Well-pleased the reader's wonder to engage,
He brings our grandsires' habit on the stage,
And garbs that whilst graced an uncouth age.
Yet must not such appear in every place;
When ranged too thick, the poem they disgrace;
Since of new words such numbers you command,
Deal out the old ones with a sparing hand.

Whene'er your images can lay no claim
To a fixed term, and want a certain name,
To paint one thing the licensed bard affords
A pompous circle, and a crowd of words.

Two plighted words in one with grace appear,
When they with ease glide smoothly o'er the ear.
Two may embrace at once, but seldom more,
Nor verse can bear the mingled shape of four;
No triple monsters dwell on Latium's shore.
When, mixed with smooth, these harsher strains are found,
We start with horror at the frightful sound;
The Grecian bards, in whom such freedoms please,

Ætatis gaudent insignibus antiquai,
Et veterum ornatus induti incedere avorum.
Non tamen ille vetus squalor fuat undique et ater
Verborum situs: his modus adsit denique, quando
Copia non desit quorum nunc pervius usus.
Tum quoque si deerunt rebus sua nomina certa,
Fas illas apta verborum ambire corona,
Et late circumfusis comprehendere dictis.
Verba etiam tum bina juvat conjungere in unum
Molliter inter se vinclo sociata jugali.
Verum plura nefas vulgo congesta coire,
Ipsaque quadrifidis subniti carmina membris:
Itala nec passim fert monstra tricorpora tellus.
Horresco diros sonitus, ac levia fundo
Invitus perterricrepas per carmina voces.
Argolici, quos ista decet concessa libido,
May match with more success such words as these,
Heap hills on hills, and bid the structure rise,
Till the vast pile of mountains prop the skies.

What words soever of vast bulk we view,
One of less size may sometimes split in two;
Sometimes we separate from the whole a part,
And prune the more luxuriant limbs with art.
Thus when the names of heroes we declare,
Names whose unpolished sounds offend the ear,
We add, or lop some branches which abound,
Till the harsh accents are with smoothness crowned
That mellow every word, and softens every sound:
By such a happy change, Sichæbas came
To sink his roughness in Sichæus' name.
Hence would I rather choose those dire alarms
Of vast Enceladus, and Heaven in arms,
And the bold Titan's battles to rehearse—
Harmonious names, that glide into the verse—
Than count the rough, the barbarous nations o'er,
Which Rome subdued of old from shore to shore.

Talia connubia, et tales celebrent Hymenæos:
Ter geminas immane struant ad sidera moles,
Pelion addentes Osseæ, et Pelio Olympum.

At verbis etiam partes ingentia in ambas
Verba interpositis proscindere, seque parare,
Deterere interdum licet, atque abstraxe secando
Exiguam partem, et strinxisse fluentia membra.
Idcirco siguando ducum referenda virumque
Nomina dura nimis dictu, atque asperrima cultu,
Illa aliqui, nunc addentes, nunc inde putantes
Pauca minutatim, levant, ac mollia reddunt,
Sichæumque vocant mutata parte Sichæbam.
Hinc mihi Titanum pugnas, et sæva gigantum
Bella magis libeat canere, Enceladique tumultus,
Quam populos Itala quondam virtute subactos,
Atque triumphatas diverso a littore gentes.
Let things submit to words on no pretense,
But make your words subservient to your sense,
Nor for their sake admit a single line
But what contributes to the main design;
Through every part most diligently pierce,
And weigh the sound and sense of every verse.
Unless your strictest caution you display,
Some words may lead the heedless bard away,
Steal from their duty, and desert their post,
And skulk in darkness, indolently lost;
Or, while their proper parts their fellows ply,
Contribute nought but sound and harmony.
This to prevent, consult your words, and know
How far their strength, extent, and nature go;
To all, their charges and their labors fit,
To all, their several provinces of wit.
Without this care, the poem will abound
With empty noise and impotence of sound,
Unmeaning terms will crowd in every part,
Play round the ear, but never reach the heart.
Yet would I sometimes venture to disperse

Sed neque, verborum causa, vis ulla canentem,
Consilium praetet, cogat res addere inanes,
Nomina sed rebus semper servire jubeto,
Omnia perpendens versus resonantia membra.
Verba etenim quaeam ignarum te fallere possunt,
Ni vigiles, mandatum et munus obire recusent,
Furenturque operi clam sese, et inertia cessent,
Cetera dum labor exercet concordia jussus,
Quaeque suus: tantum illa dabunt numerumque sonumque.
Atque ideo quid ferre queant, quid quaeque recusent
Explorare prius labor esto, et munera justa
Mandato, ac proprium cunctis partire laborem.
Obscurus aliter crepitus, et murmura vana
Miscebis, ludesque sonis fallacibus aures.
Nec tamen interdum vacuas, animoque carentes
Some words, whose splendor should adorn my verse—
Words that to wit and thought have no pretense,
And rather vehicles of sound than sense—
Till in the gorgeous dress the lines appear,
And court with gentle harmony the ear.
Nor with too fond a care such words pursue,
They meet your sight, and rise in every view.
Oft from its chains the shackled verse unloose,
And give it liberty to walk in prose;
Then be the work renewed with endless pain,
And join with care the shattered parts again;
The lurking faults and errors you may see,
When the words run unmanacled and free.

Attend, young bard, and listen while I sing:
Lo! I unlock the Muse's sacred spring;
Lo! Phœbus calls thee to his inmost shrine;
Hark! in one common voice the tuneful Nine
Invite and court thee to the rites divine.
When first to man the privilege was given
To hold by verse an intercourse with Heaven,

Addubitem ipse volens incassum fundere voces,
Verbaque quae nullo fungantur munere sensus:
Dives ut egregio tantum et conspectus amictu
Versus eat, dulcique sono demulceat aures.
Atque adeo quae sint ne vero quare: profecto
Illa tibi se sponte dabunt per se obvia passim.
Sæpe autem ruptis vinculis exempta volutes
Membra, et compactum quæsitor disjice versum,
Post iterum refice, et partes in pristina rede
Partibus avulsas: nunquam te libera vinclis
Incautum fallent, resoluto carmine, verba.

Huc ades, hic penitus tibi totum Helicona recludam:
Te Musæ, puer, hic facilis penetralibus imis
Admittunt, sacrisque adytis invitat Apollo.
Principio quoniam magni commercia coeli
Numina concessere homini, cui carmina curæ,
Unwilling that the immortal art should lie
Cheap, and exposed to every vulgar eye,
Great Jove, to drive away the groveling crowd,
To narrow bounds confined the glorious road,
Which more exalted spirits may pursue,
And left it open to the sacred few.
For many a painful task, in every part,
Claims all the poet's vigilance and art.
'Tis not enough his verses to complete,
In measure, numbers, or determined feet;
Or render things by clear expression bright,
And set each object in a proper light;
To all, proportioned terms he must dispense,
And make the sound a picture of the sense,
The correspondent words exactly frame,
The look, the features, and the mien, the same.
His thoughts the bard must suitably express,
Each in a different face and different dress,
Lest in unvaried looks the crowd be shown,
And the whole multitude appear as one.
With rapid feet and wings, without delay,

Ipse Deum genitor divinam noluit artem
Omnibus expositam vulgo, immemorisque patere:
Atque ideo, turbam quo longe arceret inerterm,
Angustam esse viam voluit, paucisque licere;
Multa adeo incumbunt doctis vigilanda poetis.
Haud satis est illis utcunque claudere versum,
Et res verborum propria vi reddere claras:
Omnia sed numeris vocum concordibus aptant,
Atque sono quaeque canunt imitantur, et apta
Verborum facie, et quiesito carminis ore.
Nam diversa opus est veluti dare versibus ora,
Diversosque habitus, ne qualis primus, et alter,
Talis et inde alter, vultuque incedat eodem.
Hic melior motuque pedum, et pernicibus alis,
This swiftly flies, and smoothly skims away;
That, vast of size, his limbs huge, broad, and strong,
Moves ponderous, and scarce drags his bulk along.
This blooms with youth and beauty in his face,
And Venus breathes on every limb a grace;
That, of rude form, his uncouth numbers shows,
Looks horrible, and frowns with his rough brows;
His monstrous tail in many a fold and wind,
Voluminous and vast, curls up behind;
At once the image and the lines appear
Rude to the eye, and frightful to the ear.
Nor are those figures given without a cause,
But fixed and settled by determined laws;
All claim and wear, as their deserts are known,
A voice, a face, and habit of their own.
Lo! when the sailors steer the ponderous ships,
And plough with brazen beaks the foamy deeps,
Incumbent on the main that roars around,
Beneath their laboring oars the waves resound,
The prows wide-echoing through the dark profound:

Molle viam tacito lapsu per levia radit:
Ille autem membris, ac mole ignavius ingens
Incedit tardo molimine subsidendo.
Ecce aliquis subit egregio pulcherrimus ore,
Cui laetum membris Venus omnibus aflat honorem.
Contra alius rudis, informes ostendit et artus,
Hirsutumque supercilium, ac caudam sinuosam,
Ingratus visu, sonitu illætabilis ipso.
Nec vero hæ sine lege datæ, sine mente figurae,
Sed facies sua pro meritis, habitusque sonusque
Cunctis, cuique suus, vocum discrimine certo.
Ergo ubi jam nautæ spumas salis ere ruentes
Incubuere mari, vidas spumare reductis
Convulsum remis, rostrisque stridentibus æquor.
Tunc longe sale saxa sonant, tunc et freta ventis
To the loud call each distant rock replies,
Tossed by the storm the frothy surges rise,
While the hoarse ocean beats the sounding shore,
Dashed from the strand the flying waters roar,
Flash at the shock, and, gathering in an heap,
The liquid mountains rise, and overhang the deep.
See through her shores Trinacria’s realms rebound,
Starting and trembling at the bellowing sound;
High-towering o’er the waves the mountains ride,
And clash with floating mountains on the tide.
But when blue Neptune from his car surveys
And calms at one regard the raging seas,
Stretched like a peaceful lake the deep subsides,
And o’er the level light the galley glides.
The poet’s art and conduct we admire,
When angry Vulcan rolls a flood of fire,
When on the groves and fields the deluge preys,
And wraps the crackling stubble in the blaze.
Nor less our pleasure, when the flame divides
And climbs aspiring round the caldron’s sides;

Incipiunt agitata tumescere: littore fluctus
Illidunt raquo, atque refracta remurmurat unda
Ad scopulos, cumulo insequitur præruptus aquæ mons.
Nec mora, Trinacriam cernas procul intremere omnem
Funditus, et montes concurrere montibus altos.
Cum vero ex alto speculatus cærula Nereus
Lenit in morem stagni, placidæque paludis,
Labitur uncta vadis abies, natat uncta carina.
Hinc etiam soleres mirabere sæpe legendo,
Sicubi Vulcanus sylvis incendia misit,
Aut agro, stipulas flamma crepitante cremari.
Nec minus exulant latices, cum tæda sonore
Virgea suggeritur costis undantis aheni.
Carmine nec levi dicenda est scabra crepido.
Tum, si læta canunt, hilarí quoque carmina vultu
From the dark bottom work the waters up,
Swell, boil, and hiss, and bubble to the top.
Thus in smooth lines smooth subjects we rehearse,
But the rough rock roars in as rough a verse.
If gay the subject, gay must be the song,
And the brisk numbers quickly glide along
When the fields flourish, or the skies unfold
Swift from the flying hinge their gates of gold.
If sad the theme, then each grave line moves slow,
The mournful numbers languishingly flow,
And drag, and labor, with a weight of woe,
If e'er the boding bird of night, who mourns
O'er ruins, desolations, graves, and urns,
With piercing screams the darkness should invade,
And break the silence of the dismal shade.
When things are small the terms should still be so,
For low words please us when the theme is low.
But when some giant, horrible and grim,
Enormous in his gait, and vast in every limb,
Stalks towering on, the swelling words must rise
In just proportion to the monster's size;
If some large weight his huge arms strive to shove,

Incedunt, lætumque sonant haud segnia verba:
Seu cum vero novo rident prata humida; seu cum
Panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi.
Contra autem sese tristes inamabile carmen
Induit in vultus, si forte invisa volucris
Nocte sedens serum canit importuna per umbras,
Ut quondam in bustis, aut culminibus desertis.
Verba etiam res exigua angusta sequuntur,
Ingentesque juvant ingentia: cuncta gigantem
Vasta decent, vultus immannes, pectora lata,
Et magni membrorum artus, magna ossa, lacertique.
Atque adeo, siquid geritur molimine magno,
Adde moram, et pariter tecum quoque verba laborent
The verse too labors; the thronged words scarce move.
When each stiff clod beneath the ponderous plough
Crumbles and breaks, the encumbered lines march slow;
Nor less when pilots catch the friendly gales,
Unfurl their shrouds, and hoist the wide-stretched sails.
But if the poem suffers from delay,
Let the lines fly precipitate away,
And when the viper issues from the brake
Be quick; with stones and brands and fire attack
His rising crest, and drive the serpent back.
When night descends, or, stunned by numerous strokes
And groaning, to the earth drops the vast ox,
The line too sinks with correspondent sound,
Flat with the steer, and headlong to the ground.
When the wild waves subside, and tempests cease,
And hush their roarings and their rage to peace,
So oft we see the interrupted strain
Stopped in the midst, and with the silent main,
Pause for a space; — at last it glides again.
When Priam strains his aged arm, to throw

Segnia: seu quando vi multa gleba coactis
Æternum frangenda bidentibus, æque re seu cum
Cornua velatarum obvertimus antennarum.
At mora si fuerit damno, properare jubebo.
Si se forte cava extulerit mala vipera terra,
Tolle moras, cape saxa manu, cape robora, pastor:
Ferte citi flammam, date tela, repellite pestem.
Ipse etiam versus ruat, in præcæpsque feratur,
Immenso cum praecipitans ruit Oceano nox,
Aut cum perculsus graviter procumbit humi bos.
Cumque etiam requies rebus datur, ipsa quoque ulтро
Carmina paulisper cursu cessare videbis
In medio interrupta: quierunt cum freta ponti,
Postquam auræ posuere, quiescere protinus ipsum
Cernere erit, mediiisque incipientis sistere versus.
Quid dicam, senior cum telum imbelle sine ictu
His unavailing javelin at the foe
(His blood congealed, and every nerve unstrung),
Then with the theme complies his artful song;
Like him the solitary number's flow
Weak, trembling, melancholy, stiff, and slow.
Not so young Pyrrhus, who with rapid force
Beats down embattled armies in his course;
The raging youth on trembling Ilion falls,
Bursts her strong gates and shakes her lofty walls,
Provokes his flying courser to his speed
In full career to charge the warlike steed;
He piles the field with mountains of the slain,
He pours, he storms, he thunders through the plain.
In this the poet's justest conduct lies,
When with the various subjects he complies,
To sink with judgment, and with judgment rise.
We see him now, remissive of his force,
Glide with a low and inoffensive course;
Stripped of the gaudy dress of words he goes,
And scarcely lifts the poem up from prose:
And now he brings with loosened reins along

Invalidus jacit, et defectis viribus æger?
Nam quoque tum versus segni pariter pede languet:
Sanguis hebet, frigent effeteæ in corpore vires.
Fortem autem juvenem deceat prorumpere in arces,
Evertisse domos, praefractaque quadrupedantum
Pectora pectoribus perrumpere, sternere turres
Ingentes, totoque serum dare funera campo.
Nulla adeo vatum major prudentia, quam se
Aut premere, aut rerum pro majestate canendo
Tollère: nunc illos animum summittere cernas
Verborum parcos, humilique obrepere gressu,
Textaque vix gracili dedicere carmina filo,
Nunc illos, verbis opulentos, divite vena
Cernere erit fluere, ac laxis decurrere habenis
All in a full career the boundless song;
In wide array luxuriantly he pours
A crowd of words, and opens all his stores;
The lavish eloquence redundant flows,
Thick as the fleeces of the winter snows,
When Jove invests the naked Alps, and sheds
The silent tempest on their hoary heads.
Sometimes the godlike fury he restrains,
Checks his impetuous speed, and draws the reins;
Balanced and poised, he neither sinks nor soars,
Ploughs the mid space, and steers between the shores,
And shaves the confines; till, all dangers passed,
He shoots with joy into the port at last.

For what remains unsung: I now declare
What claims the poet’s last and strictest care.
When, all adventures passed, his labors tend
In one continued order to their end,
When the proud victor on his conquest smiles,
And safe enjoys the triumph of his toils,
Let him by timely diffidence be awed,
Nor trust too soon the unpolished piece abroad.

Fluxosque ingentesque: redundat copia læta
Ubere felici, verborumque ingruit agmen,
Hibernarum instar nivium, cum Juppiter Alpes
Frigidus æreas, atque alta cacumina vestit.
Interdum vero cohibent undantia lora,
Non humiles, non sublimes, media inter utrumque
Littus arant veluti spatia, et confinia radunt:
Sic demum portu læti conduntur in alto.

Quod superest, quæ postremo peragenda poëtæ,
Expediam. Postquam casus evaserit omnes,
Signaque perpetuum deduxit ad ultima carmen
Exultans animo victor, letusque laborum;
Non totam subito praecipis securâ per urbem
Carmina vulgabìt: ah! ne sit gloria tanti,
O may his rash ambition ne'er inflame
His breast with such a dangerous thirst of fame!
But let the terror of disgrace control
The warm, the partial fondness of the soul,
And force the bard to throw his passion by,
Nor view his offspring with a parent's eye,
Till his affections are by justice crossed,
And all the father in the judge is lost.
He seeks his friends, nor trusts himself alone,
But asks their judgment and resigns his own;
Begs them, with urgent prayers, to be sincere,
Just and exact, and rigidly severe,
Due verdict to pronounce on every thought,
Nor spare the slightest shadow of a fault;
But, bent against himself, and strictly nice,
He thanks each critic that detects a vice;
Though charged with what his judgment can defend,
He joins the partial sentence of his friend.
The piece thrown by, the careful bard reviews
The long-forgotten labors of his Muse;
Lo! on all sides far different objects rise,

Et dulcis famæ quondam malesuada cupidō:
At patiens operum semper, metuensque pericli
Expectet, donec sedata mente calorem
Paulatim exuerit, foetusque abolerit amorem
Ipse sui, curamque alio traduxerit omnem.

Interea fidos adit haud secures amicos,
Utque velint inimicum animum, frontisque severe
Dura supercilia induere, et non parcere culpæ,
Hos iterum atque iterum rogat; admonitusque latentis
Grates lætus agit vitii, et peccata fatetur
Sponte sua, quamvis etiam damnetur iniquo
Judicio, et falsum queat ore refellere crimen.
Tum demum redit, et post longa oblivia per se
Incipit hic illic veterem explorare laborem.
And a new prospect strikes his wondering eyes;
Warm from the brain, the lines his love engrossed—
Now in themselves their former selves are lost;
Now his own labors he begins to blame,
And blushing reads them with regret and shame;
He loathes the piece, condemns it, nor can find
The genuine stamp and image of his mind.
This thought and that indignant he rejects,
When most secure, some danger he suspects,
Anxious he adds, and trembling he corrects;
With kind severities and timely art,
Lops the luxuriant growth of every part,
Prunes the superfluous boughs that wildly stray,
And cuts the rank redundancies away.
Thus armed with proper discipline he stands,
By day, by night, applies his healing hands,
From every line to wipe out every blot,
Till the whole piece is guiltless of a fault.
Hard is the task, but needful, if your aim
Tends to the prospect of immortal fame.

Ecce! autem ante oculos nova se fert undique imago;
Longe alia heu! facies rerum, mutataque ab illis
Carmina, quæ tantum ante, recens confecta, placebant.
Miratur tacitus, nec se cognoscit in illis
Immemor, atque operum piget, ac sese increpat ultro.
Tum retractat opus, commissa piacula doctæ
Palladis arte luens: nunc hæc, nunc relict illa,
Omnia tuta timens, melioraque sufficit illis,
Attondetque comas stringens, sylvamque fluentem,
Luxuriemque minutatim depascit inanem,
Exercens durum imperium: dum funditus omnem,
Nocturnis instans operis, operisque diurnis,
Versibus eluerit labem, et commissa piarit.
Arduus hic labor: hic autem durate, poëtae,
Gloria quos movet æternæ pulcherrima famæ.
If some unfinished numbers limp behind,
When the warm poet rages unconfined,
Then when his swift invention scorns to stay,
By a full tide of genius whirled away —
He brings the sovereign cure their failings claim,
Confirms the sickly, and supports the lame.
Oft as the seasons roll, renew thy pain,
And bring the poem to the test again:
In different lights the expression must be ranged,
The garb and colors of the words be changed,
With endless care thy watchful eyes must pierce,
And mark the parts distinct of every verse.
In this persist; for oft one day denies
The kind assistance which the next supplies;
As oft, without your vigilance and care,
Some faults detected by themselves appear;
And now a thousand errors you explore
That lay involved in mantling clouds before.
Oft, to improve his Muse, the bard should try,
By turns, the temper of a different sky;

Tum sigua est etiam pars imperfecta relict,
Olim dum properat furor, ingeniique morari
Tempestas renuit, suppletque, et versibus affert
Invalidis miseratus opem, claudisque medetur.
Nec semel attrectare satis, verum omne quotannis
Terque, quaterque opus evolvendum, verbaque versis
Æternum immutanda coloribus: omne frequenti
Sæpe revisendum studio per singula carmen.
Quod non una dies, fors afferet altera, et ultro,
Nullo olim studio, nulla olim in carmine cura,
Deprense per se prodentur tempore culpa,
Quæque latent varix densa inter nubila pestes.
Quin etiam doctum multum juvet ille laborem,
Qui varies cœli creber mutaverit oras.
Namque etiam mutant animi, genioque locorum
Diversas species, diversos pectora motus
For thus his genius takes a different face
From every different genius of a place.
The soul too changes, and the bard may find
A thousand various motions in his mind;
New gleams of light will every moment rise,
While from each part the scattering darkness flies;
And, as he alters what appears amiss,
He adds new flowers to beautify the piece.
But here, even here, avoid the extreme of such
Who with excess of care correct too much,
Whose barbarous hands no calls of pity bound,
While with the infected parts they cut the sound,
And make the cure more dangerous than the wound;
Till, all the blood and spirits drained away,
The body sickens, and the parts decay,
The native beauties die, the limbs appear
Rough and deformed with one continued scar.
No fixed determined number I enjoin,
But when some years shall perfect the design,
Reflect on life; and, mindful of thy span,
Whose scanty limit bounds the days of man,

Concipiunt, nostrisque novæ se mentibus offert
Ultrix aliquid semper lucis, tenebraeque recedunt,
Atque novos operi semper fas addere flores.
Verum est hic etiam modus: huic imponere curæ
Nescivere aliqui finem, medicasque secandis
Morbi abstinuisse manus, et parcer tandem
Immites, donec macie confectus et aæger
Aruit exasuto velut omni sanguine foetus,
Nativumque decus posuit, dum plurima ubique
Deformat sectos artus inhonesta cicatrix.
Tuque ideo vitae usque memor brevioris, ubi annos
Post aliquot (neque enim numerum, neque tempora pono Certa tibi) addideris decoris satis atque nitoris,
Rumpe moras, opus ingentem dimitte per orbem,
Wide o'er the spacious world, without delay,
Permit the finished piece to take its way,
Till all mankind admires the heavenly song,
The theme of every hand and every tongue.
See! thy pleased friends thy spreading glory draws,
Each with his voice to swell the vast applause;
The vast applause shall reach the starry frame,
No years, no ages, shall obscure thy fame,
And Earth's last ends shall hear thy darling name.
Shall we then doubt to scorn all worldly views,
And not prefer the rapture of the Muse?

Thrice happy bards! who, taught by Heaven, obey
These rules, and follow where they lead the way,
And hear the faithful precepts I bestowed,
Inspired with rage divine, and laboring with the god.
But art alone, and human means, must fail,
Nor these instructive precepts will prevail,
Unless the gods their present aid supply,
And look with kind indulgence from the sky.
I only pointed out the paths that lead
The panting youths to steep Parnassus' head;

Perque manus, perque ora virum permitte vagari.
Continuo laeto te dulces undique amici
Gratantès plausu excipient: tua gloria coelo
Succedet, nomenque tuum sinus ultimus orbis
Audiet, ac nullo diffusum abolebitur ævo.
Et dubitamus opes animo contemnere avari,
Nec potius sequimur dulces ante omnia Musas?
O fortunati! quibus olim haec numina dextra
Annuerint precepta sequi, quæve ipse canendo
Jussa dedi plenus Phæbo, attonitusque furore:
Quando non artes satis ulke; hominumque labores,
Et mea dicta parum prosint, ni desuper adsit
Auxilium, an praesens favor omnipotentis Olympi.
Ipse viam tantum potui docuisse repertam
And showed the tuneful Muses from afar,
Mixed in a solemn choir, and dancing there.
Thither forbidden by the fates to go,
I sink and grovel in the world below;
Deterred by them, in vain I labor up,
And stretch these hands to grasp the distant top.
Enough for me, at distance if I view
Some bard, some happier bard, the path pursue;
Who, taught by me to reach Parnassus' crown,
Mounts up, and calls his slow companions on.
But yet these rules, perhaps, these humble lays,
May claim a title to a share of praise,
When, in a crowd, the gathering youth shall hear
My voice and precepts with a willing ear,
Close in a ring shall press the listening throng,
And learn from me to regulate their song.
Then, if the pitying fates prolong my breath,
And from my youth avert the dart of Death;
Whene'er I sink in life's declining stage,

Aonas ad montes, longeque ostendere Musas,
Plaudentes celsæ choreas in vertice rupis,
Quo me haud ire sinunt unquam fata invidia, et usque
Absterrentque, arcentque procul, nec summa jugi unquam
Fas presensare manu fastigia: sat mihi, siquem,
Sique olim longe aspiciam mea fida sequutum
Indicia exuperasse viam, summoque receptum
Vertice, et hærentes socios juga ad alta vocantem.
Sed nonnulla tamen nostri quoque gratia facti
Forsan erit: me fida olim præcepta canentem
Stipabunt juvenes denso circum agmine fusi,
Et vocem excipient intenti sensibus omnes.

Tum, vitae si justa meæ procedere lustra
Fata sinent, nec me viridi succiderit ævo
Impia mors, olli gelida tardante senecta
Languentem, et sera defessum ætate magistrum
Certatim prensa super alta cacumina dextra
Trembling and fainting on the verge of age,
To help their wearied master shall they run,
And lend their friendly hands to guide him on;
Through blooming groves his tardy progress wait,
And set him gently down at Phœbus' gate,
The while he sings before the hallowed shrine
The sacred poets and the tuneful Nine.
Here then in Roman numbers will we rise,
And lift the fame of Virgil to the skies —
Ausonia's pride and boast; who brings along
Strength to my lines, and spirit to my song.
First how the mighty bard transported o'er
The sacred Muses from the Aonian shore,
Led the fair sisters to the Hesperian plains,
And sung in Roman towns the Grecian strains;
How in his youth to woods and groves he fled,
And sweetly tuned the soft Sicilian reed;
Next, how, in pity to the Ausonian swains,
He raised to Heaven the honors of the plains,
Rapt in Triptolemus's car on high,
He scattered peace and plenty from the sky;
Fired with his country's fame, with loud alarms

Sepe trahent, uldroque ferent per amœna locorum,
Et summâ invalidum sistent ad limina Phœbi,
Cantantem Musas, vatunque inventa piorum.
Virgilii ante omnes laeti hic super astra feremus
Carminibus patriis laudes; decus unde Latinum,
Unde mihi vires, animus mihi ducitur unde:
Primus ut Aoniis Musas deduxerit oris,
Argolicum resonans Romana per oppida carmen:
Ut juvenis Siculas sylvis infilarit avenas:
Utque idem, Ausonios animi miseratus agrestes,
Extulerit sacros ruris super æthera honores,
Triptolemi invectus volucri per sidera curru:
Res demum ingressus Romanæ laudis, ad arma
At last he roused all Latium up to arms,
In just array the Phrygian troops bestowed,
And spoke the voice and language of a god.
Father of verse! from whom our honors spring,
See from all parts our bards attend their king,
Beneath thy banners ranged, thy fame increase,
And rear proud trophies from the spoils of Greece!
Low, in Elysian fields, her tuneful throng
Bow to thy laurels and adore thy song;
On thee alone thy country turns her eyes,
On thee her poets' future fame relies.
See how in crowds they court thy aid divine—
For all their honors but depend on thine!—
Taught from the womb thy numbers to rehearse,
And sip the balmy sweets of every verse.
Unrivaled bard! all ages shall decree
The first unenvied palm of fame to thee;
Thrice happy bard! thy boundless glory flies,
Where never mortal must attempt to rise;
Such heavenly numbers in thy song we hear,
And more than human accents charm the ear!

Excierit Latium omne, Phrygumque instruxerit alas,
Verba Deo similis: decus a te principe nostrum
Omne, pater! tibi Grajugenum de gente trophæa
Suspendunt Itali vates, tua signa sequiti.
Omnis in Elysii unum te Græcia campis
Miraturque, auditque ultrò, assurgitque canenti,
Te sine, nil nobis pulchrum: omnes ora Latini
In te, oculosque ferunt versi: tua maxima virtus
Omnibus auxilio est: tua libant carmina passim
Assidui, primis et te venerantur ab annis.
Ne tibi quis vatum certaverit: omnia cedant
Secla, nec invideant primos tibi laudis honores.
Fortunate operum! tua prestant gloria famæ,
Quo quenquam aspirare nefas, sese extulit alis.
To thee, his darling, Phoebus' hands impart
His soul, his genius, and immortal art.
What help or merit in these rules are shown,
The youth must owe to thy support alone —
The youth, whose wandering feet with care I led Aloft, o'er steep Parnassus' sacred head,
Taught from thy great example to explore
Those arduous paths which thou hast trod before.
Hail, pride of Italy! thy country's grace!
Hail, glorious light of all the tuneful race!
For whom we weave the crown, and altars raise,
And with rich incense bid the temples blaze;
Our solemn hymns shall still resound thy praise.
Hail, holy bard, and boundless in renown!
Thy fame, dependent on thyself alone,
Requires no song, no numbers, but thy own.
Look down propitious, and my thoughts inspire!
Warm my chaste bosom with thy sacred fire!
Let all thy flames with all their raptures roll,
Deep in my breast, and kindle all my soul!

Nil adeo mortale sonas: tibi captus amore
Ipse suos animos, sua munera latus Apollo
Addidit, ac multa præstantem insigniit arte.
Quodcunque hoc opis, atque artis, nostrique reperti
Uni grata tibi debet præclara juventus,
Quam docui, et rupis sacra super ardua duxi,
Dum tua fida lego vestigia, te sequor unum
O decus Italiae! lux o clarissima vatum!
Te colimus, tibi serta damus, tibi tura, tibi aras
Et tibi rite sacrum semper dicamus honorem
Carminibus memores: salve sanctissime vates!
Laudibus augeri tua gloria nil potis ultra,
Et nostræ nil vocis eget: nos aspice præsens,
Pectoribusque tuos castris infunde calores
Adveniens, pater! atque animis te te insere nostris.
BOILEAU.
ASH author, 'tis a vain presumptuous crime
To undertake the sacred art of rime;
If at thy birth the stars that ruled thy sense
Shone not with a poetic influence,
In thy strait genius thou wilt still be bound,
Find Phœbus deaf, and Pegasus unsound.
You, then, that burn with a desire to try
The dangerous course of charming poetry,
Forbear in fruitless verse to lose your time,
Or take for genius the desire of rime;
Fear the allurements of a specious bait,
And well consider your own force and weight.

C'EST en vain qu'au Parnasse un téméraire auteur
Pense de l'art des vers atteindre la hauteur;
S'il ne sent point du ciel l'influence secrète,
Si son astre en naissant ne l'a formé poète,
Dans son génie étroit il est toujours captif;
Pour lui Phébus est sourd, et Pégase est rétif.
O vous donc qui, brûlant d'une ardeur périscente,
Courez du bel esprit la carrière épineuse,
N'allez pas sur des vers sans fruit vous consumer,
Ni prendre pour génie un amour de rimer;
Craignez d'un vain plaisir les trompeuses amores,
Et consultez longtemps votre esprit et vos forces.
Nature abounds in wits of every kind,
And for each author can a talent find:
One may in verse describe an amorous flame,
Another sharpen a short epigram;
Waller a hero's mighty acts extol,
Spenser sing Rosalind in pastoral.
But authors, that themselves too much esteem,
Lose their own genius, and mistake their theme:
Thus in times past Dubartas vainly writ,
Alloying sacred truth with trifling wit;
Impertinently, and without delight,
Described the Israelites' triumphant flight;
And, following Moses o'er the sandy plain,
Perished with Pharaoh in the Arabian main.

Whate'er you write of pleasant or sublime,
Always let sense accompany your rime;
Falsely they seem each other to oppose,—
Rime must be made with reason's laws to close;

La nature, fertile en esprits excellens,
Sait entre les auteurs partager les talens:
L'un peut tracer en vers une amoureuse flamme,
L'autre d'un trait plaisant aiguiser l'épigramme;
Malherbe d'un héros peut vanter les exploits,
Racan chanter Philis, les bergers et les bois.
Mais souvent un esprit qui se flatte et qui s'aime
Méconnait son génie, et s'ignore soi-même:
Ainsi tel autrefois qu'on vit avec Faret
Charbonner de ses vers les murs d'un cabaret,
S'en va, mal à propos, d'une voix insolente
Chanter du peuple hébreu la fuite triomphante,
Et, poursuivant Moïse au travers des déserts,
Court avec Pharaon se noyer dans les mers.

Quelque sujet qu'on traite, ou plaisant, ou sublime,
Que toujours le bon sens s'accorde avec la rime;
L'un l'autre vainement ils semblent se hâter,—
And when to conquer her you bend your force,
The mind will triumph in the noble course;
To reason’s yoke she quickly will incline,
Which, far from hurting, renders her divine;
But if neglected, will as easily stray,
And master reason, which she should obey.
Love reason then; and let whate’er you write
Borrow from her its beauty, force, and light.

Most writers mounted on a resty muse,
Extravagant and senseless objects choose;
They think they err, if in their verse they fall
On any thought that’s plain or natural.
Fly this excess; and let Italians be
Vain authors of false glittering poetry.
All ought to aim at sense; but most in vain
Strive the hard pass and slippery path to gain;
You drown, if to the right or left you stray;
Reason to go has often but one way.

La rime est une esclave, et ne doit qu’obéir.
Lorsqu’à la bien chercher d’abord on s’évertue,
L’esprit à la trouver aisément s’habitue;
Au joug de la raison sans peine elle fléchit,
Et, loin de la gêner, la sert et l’enrichit;
Mais lorsqu’on la néglige, elle devient rebelle,
Et pour la rattraper le sens court après elle.
Aimez donc la raison; que toujours vos écrits
Empruntent d’elle seule et leur lustre et leur prix.

La plupart, emportés d’une fougue insensée,
Toujours loin du droit sens vont chercher leur pensée;
Ils croiroient s’abaisser, dans leurs vers monstrueux,
S’ils pensoient ce qu’un autre a pu penser comme eux.
Évitons ces excès; laissons à l’Italie
De tous ces faux brillans l’éclatante folie.
Tout doit tendre au bon sens; mais, pour y parvenir,
Le chemin est glissant et pénible à tenir;
Pour peu qu’on s’en écarte, aussitôt l’on se noie;
Sometimes an author, fond of his own thought,
Pursues its object till it's overwrought:
If he describes a house, he shows the face,
And after walks you round from place to place;
Here is a vista, there the doors unfold,
Balconies here are balustered with gold;
Then counts the rounds and ovals in the halls,
'The festoons, friezes, and the astragals;'
Tired with his tedious pomp, away I run,
And skip o'er twenty pages, to be gone.
Of such descriptions the vain folly see,
And shun their barren superfluity.
All that is needless carefully avoid;
The mind once satisfied is quickly cloyed.
He cannot write who knows not to give o'er,
To mend one fault he makes a hundred more:
A verse was weak, you turn it much too strong,
And grow obscure for fear you should be long;

La raison pour marcher n'a souvent qu'une voie.
Un auteur quelquefois, trop plein de son objet,
Jamais sans l'épuiser n'abandonne un sujet:
S'il rencontre un palais, il m'en dépêine la face;
Il me promène après de terrasse en terrasse;
Ici s'offre un perron, là règne un corridor,
Là ce balcon s'enferme en un balustre d'or.
Il compte des plafonds les ronds et les ovales;
'Ce ne sont que festons, ce ne sont qu'astragales;'
Je saute vingt feuillots pour en trouver la fin,
Et je me sauve à peine au travers du jardin.
Fuyez de ces auteurs l'abondance stérile,
Et ne vous chargez point d'un détail inutile.
Tout ce qu'on dit de trop est fade et rebutant;
L'esprit rassasié le rejette à l'instant.
Qui ne sait se borner ne sut jamais écrire.
Souvent la peur d'un mal nous conduit dans un pire:
Un vers était trop faible, et vous le rendez dur;
Some are not gaudy, but are flat and dry;
Not to be low, another soars too high.

Would you of every one deserve the praise?
In writing vary your discourse and phrase;
A frozen style, that neither ebbs nor flows,
Instead of pleasing, makes us gape and doze.
Those tedious authors are esteemed by none,
Who tire us, humming the same heavy tone.

Happy who in his verse can gently steer
From grave to light, from pleasant to severe!
His works will be admired wherever found,
And oft with buyers will be compassed round.

In all you write be neither low nor vile;
The meanest theme may have a proper style.)
The dull burlesque appeared with impudence,
And pleased by novelty in spite of sense;
All, except trivial points, grew out of date;
Parnassus spoke the cant of Billingsgate;

J'évite d'être long, et je deviens obscur;
L'un n'est point trop fardé, mais sa muse est trop nue;
L'autre a peur de ramper, il se perd dans la nue.

Voulez-vous du public mériter les amours,
Sans cesse en écrivant variez vos discours;
Un style trop égal et toujours uniforme
En vain brille à nos yeux, il faut qu'il nous endorme.
On lit peu ces auteurs, nés pour nous ennuyer,
Qui toujours sur un ton semblent psalmodier.

Heureux qui, dans ses vers, sait d'une voix légère
Passer du grave au doux, du plaisant au sévère!
Son livre, aimé du ciel, et cheri des lecteurs,
Est souvent chez Barbin entouré d'acheteurs.
Quoi que vous écriviez, évitez la bassesse;
Le style le moins noble a pourtant sa noblesse.

Au mépris du bon sens, le burlesque effronté
Trompa les yeux d'abord, plut par sa nouveauté;
On ne vit plus en vers que pointes triviales;
Boundless and mad, disordered rime was seen;
Disguised Apollo changed to Harlequin.
This plague, which first in country towns began,
Cities and kingdoms quickly overran;
The dullest scribblers some admirers found,
And the Mock Tempest was a while renowned.
But this low stuff the town at last despised,
And scorned the folly that they once had prized,
Distinguished dull from natural and plain,
And left the villages to Flecknoe's reign.
Let not so mean a style your muse debase,
But learn from Butler the buffooning grace,
And let burlesque in ballads be employed.

Yet noisy bombast carefully avoid,
Nor think to raise, though on Pharsalia's plain,
'Millions of mourning mountains of the slain,'
Nor, with Dubartas, 'bridle up the floods,
And periwig with wool the baldpate woods.'
Choose a just style. Be grave without constraint,

Le Parnasse parla le langage des halles;
La licence à rimer alors n'eut plus de frein;
Apollon travesti devint un Tabarin.
Cette contagion infecta les provinces,
Du clerc et du bourgois passa jusques aux princes,
Le plus mauvais plaisant eut ses approbateurs,
Et, jusqu'à D'Assouci, tout trouva des lecteurs.

Mais de ce style enfin la cour désabusée
Dédaigna de ces vers l'extravagance aisé,
Distingua le naïf du plat et du bouffon,
Et laissa la province admirer le Typhon.
Que ce style jamais ne souille votre ouvrage;
Imitons de Marot l élégant badinage,
Et laissons le burlesque aux plaisans du Pont Neuf.
Mais n'allez point aussi, sur les pas de Brébeuf,
Même en une Pharsale, entasser sur les rives
'De morts et de mourans cent montagnes plaintives.'
Great without pride, and lovely without paint.
Write what your reader may be pleased to hear,
And for the measure have a careful ear;
On easy numbers fix your happy choice;
Of jarring sounds avoid the odious noise;
The fullest verse, and the most labored sense,
Displease us if the ear once take offense.
Our ancient verse, as homely as the times,
Was rude, unmeasured, only tagged with rimes;
Number and cadence, that have since been shown,
To those unpolished writers were unknown.
Fairfax was he, who, in that darker age,
By his just rules restrained poetic rage;
Spenser did next in pastorals excel,
And taught the noble art of writing well,
To stricter rules the stanza did restrain,
And found for poetry a richer vein.
Then Davenant came, who, with a new-found art,

Prenez mieux votre ton. Soyez simple avec art,
Sublime sans orgueil, agréable sans fard.
N'offrez rien au lecteur que ce qui peut lui plaire;
Ayez pour la cadence une oreille sévère;
Que toujours dans vos vers le sens couplant les mots,
Suspense l'hémistiche, en marque le repos.
Gardez qu'une voyelle à courir trop hâtée
Ne soit d'une voyelle en son chemin heurtée.
Il est un heureux choix de mots harmonieux.
Fuyez des mauvais sans le concours odieux;
Le vers le mieux rempli, la plus noble pensée,
Ne peut plaire à l'esprit quand l'oreille est blessée.
Durant les premiers ans du Parnasse français
Le caprice tout seul faisoit toutes les lois;
La rime, au bout des mots assemblés sans mesure,
Tenoit lieu d'ornemens, de nombre et de césure.
Villon sut le premier, dans ces siècles grossiers,
Débrouiller l'art confus de nos vieux romantiers;
Changed all, spoiled all, and had his way apart;
His haughty muse all others did despise,
And thought in triumph to bear off the prize,
Till the sharp-sighted critics of the times
In their Mock Gondibert exposed his rimes,
The laurels he pretended did refuse,
And dashed the hopes of his aspiring muse.
This headstrong writer, falling from on high,
Made following authors take less liberty.

Waller came last, but was the first whose art
Just weight and measure did to verse impart,
That of a well-placed word could teach the force,
And showed for poetry a nobler course.
His happy genius did our tongue refine,
And easy words with pleasing numbers join;
His verses to good method did apply,
And changed hard discord to soft harmony.

Marot bientôt après fit fleurir les ballades,
Tourna des triolets, rima des mascarades,
A des refrains réglés asservit les rondeaux,
Et montra pour rimer des chemins tout nouveaux.
Ronsard, qui le suivit par une autre méthode,
Réglant tout, brouilla tout, fit un art à sa mode,
Et toutefois longtemps eut un heureux destin;
Mais sa muse, en français parlant grec et latin,
Vit dans l'âge suivant, par un retour grotesque,
Tomber de ses grands mots le faste pédantesque.
Ce poète orgueilleux, trébuché de si haut,
Rendit plus retenus Desportes et Bertaut.

Enfin Malherbe vint, et, le premier en France,
Fit sentir dans les vers une juste cadence,
D'un mot mis en sa place enseigna le pouvoir,
Et réduisit la muse aux règles du devoir.
Par ce sage écrivain la langue réparée
N'offrit plus rien de rude à l'oreille épurée;
Les stances avec grâce apprirent à tomber,
All owned his laws; which, long approved and tried,
To present authors now may be a guide;
Tread boldly in his steps, secure from fear,
And be, like him, in your expressions clear.
If in your verse you drag, and sense delay,
My patience tires, my fancy goes astray,
And from your vain discourse I turn my mind,
Nor search an author troublesome to find.

There is a kind of writer pleased with sound,
Whose fustian head with clouds is compassed round—
No reason can disperse them with its light;
Learn then to think ere you pretend to write.
As your idea’s clear, or else obscure,
The expression follows, perfect or impure;
What we conceive with ease we can express;
Words to the notions flow with readiness.

Observe the language well in all you write,
And swerve not from it in your loftiest flight.

Et le vers sur le vers n’osa plus enjamber.
Tout reconnut ses lois; et ce guide fidèle
Aux auteurs de ce temps sert encor de modède;
Marchez donc sur ses pas; aimez sa pureté,
Et de son tour heureux imitez la clarté.
Si le sens de vos vers tarde à se faire entendre,
Mon esprit aussitôt commence à se détendre;
Et, de vos vains discours prompt à se détacher,
Ne suit point un auteur qu’il faut toujours chercher.

Il est certains esprits dont les sombres pensées
Sont d’un nuage épais toujours embarrassées—
Le jour de la raison ne le sauroit percer;
Avant donc que d’écrire, apprenez à penser.
Selon que notre idée est plus ou moins obscure,
L’expression la suit, ou moins nette ou plus pure;
Ce que l’on conçoit bien s’énonce clairement,
Et les mots pour le dire arrivent aisément.

Surtout, qu’en vos écrits la langue révérée
The smoothest verse and the exactest sense
Displease us, if ill English give offense;
A barbarous phrase no reader can approve,
Nor bombast, noise, or affectation love.
In short, without pure language, what you write
Can never yield us profit or delight.

Take time for thinking; never work in haste;
And value not yourself for writing fast;
A rapid poem, with such fury writ,
Shows want of judgment, not abounding wit.
More pleased we are to see a river lead
His gentle streams along a flowery mead,
Than from high banks to hear loud torrents roar,
With foamy waters, on a muddy shore.
Gently make haste, of labor not afraid;
A hundred times consider what you've said;
Polish, repolish, every color lay,

Dans vos plus grands excès vous soit toujours sacrée.
En vain vous me frappez d'un son mélodieux,
Si le terme est impropre, ou le tour vicieux;
Mon esprit n'admet point un pompeux barbarisme,
Ni d'un vers ampoulé l'orgueilleux solécisme.
Sans la langue, en un mot, l'auteur le plus divin,
Est toujours, quoi qu'il fasse, un méchant écrivain.

Travailllez à loisir, quelque ordre qui vous presse,
Et ne vous piquez point d'une folle vitesse;
Un style si rapide, et qui court en rimant,
Marque moins trop d'esprit, que peu de jugement.
J'aime mieux un ruisseau qui sur la molle arène
Dans un pré plein de fleurs lentement se promène,
Qu'un torrent débordé qui, d'un cours orageux,
Roule, plein de gravier, sur un terrain fançieux.
Hâtez-vous lentement; et, sans perdre courage,
Vingt fois sur le métier remettez votre ouvrage;
Polissez-le sans cesse et le repolissez;
Ajoutez quelquefois, et souvent effacez.
And sometimes add, but oftener take away.
'Tis not enough, when swarming faults are writ,
That here and there are scattered sparks of wit;
Each object must be fixed in the due place,
And differing parts have corresponding grace;
Till, by a curious art disposed, we find
One perfect whole of all the pieces joined.
Keep to your subject close in all you say,
Nor for a sounding sentence ever stray.

The public censure for your writings fear,
And to yourself be critic most severe.
Fantastic wits their darling follies love;
But find you faithful friends that will reprove,
That on your works may look with careful eyes,
And of your faults be zealous enemies.
Lay by an author's pride and vanity,
And from a friend a flatterer descry,
Who seems to like, but means not what he says;
Embrace true counsel, but suspect false praise.

C'est peu qu'en un ouvrage où les fautes fourmillent,
Des traits d'esprit semés de temps en temps pétillent.
Il faut que chaque chose y soit mise en son lieu,
Que le début, la fin, répondent au milieu;
Que d'un art délicat les pièces assorties
N'y forment qu'un seul tout de diverses parties;
Que jamais du sujet le discours s'écartant
N'aillie chercher trop loin quelque mot éclatant.

Craignez-vous pour vos vers la censure publique?
Soyez-vous à vous-même un sévère critique;
L'ignorance toujours est prête à s'admirer.
Faites-vous des amis prompts à vous censurer;
Qu'ils soient de vos écrits les confidens sincères,
Et de tous vos défauts les zélés adversaires.
Dépouillez devant eux l'arrogance d'auteur,
Mais sachez de l'ami discerner le flatterer —
Tel vous semble applaudir, qui vous raille et vous joue.
A sycophant will everything admire;
Each verse, each sentence, sets his soul on fire;
All is divine! there's not a word amiss!
He shakes with joy, and weeps with tenderness;
He overpowers you with his mighty praise.
Truth never moves in those impetuous ways.

A faithful friend is careful of your fame,
And freely will your heedless errors blame;
He cannot pardon a neglected line,
But verse to rule and order will confine,
Reprove of words the too-affected sound,—

'Here the sense flags, and your expression's round,
Your fancy tires, and your discourse grows vain,
Your terms improper; make it just and plain.'
Thus 'tis a faithful friend will freedom use.

But authors partial to their darling muse
Think to protect it they have just pretense,
And at your friendly counsel take offense.

Aimez qu'on vous conseille, et non pas qu'on vous loue.

Un flatteur aussitôt cherche à se récrier;
Chaque vers qu'il entend le fait extasier;
Tout est charmant, divin; aucun mot ne le blesse;
196
Il trépigne de joie, il pleure de tendresse;
Il vous comble partout d'éloges fastueux.
La vérité n'a point cet air impétueux.

Un sage ami, toujours rigoureux, inflexible,
Sur vos fautes jamais ne vous laisse paisible;
Il ne pardonne point les endroits négligés,
Il renvoie en leur lieu les vers mal arrangés,
Il réprime des mots l'ambitieuse emphase;
Ici le sens le choque, et plus loin c'est la phrase.
'Votre construction semble un peu s'obscurcir;
Ce terme est équivoque, il le faut éclaircir;'—
C'est ainsi que vous parle un ami véritable.

Mais souvent sur ses vers un auteur intraitable
A les protéger tous se croit intéressé,
Said you of this, that the expression's flat?
Your servant, sir, you must excuse me that,'
He answers you. — 'This word has here no grace,
Pray leave it out.' — 'That, sir, 's the properest place.' —
'This turn I like not.' — 'Tis approved by all.'
Thus, resolute not from one fault to fall,
If there's a symbol of which you doubt,
'Tis a sure reason not to blot it out.
Yet still he says you may his faults confute,
And over him your power is absolute.
But of his feigned humility take heed,
'Tis a bait laid to make you hear him read;
And, when he leaves you, happy in his Muse,
Restless he runs some other to abuse,
And often finds; for in our scribbling times
No fool can want a sot to praise his rimes;
The flattest work has ever in the court

Et d'abord prend en main le droit de l'offensé.
'De ce vers,' direz-vous, 'l'expression est basse.' —
'Ah! monsieur, pour ce vers je vous demande grâce,' Répondra-t-il d'abord. — 'Ce mot me semble froid;
Je le retrancherois.' — 'C'est le plus bel endroit!' —
'Ce tour ne me plait pas.' — 'Tout le monde l'admire.'
Ainsi toujours constant à ne se point dédire,
Qu'un mot dans son ouvrage ait paru vous blesser,
C'est un titre chez lui pour ne point l'effacer.
Cependant, à l'entendre, il chérît la critique;
Vous avez sur ces vers un pouvoir despotique;
Mais tout ce beau discours dont il vient vous flatter
N'est rien qu'un piège adroit pour vous les réciter.
Aussitôt il vous quitte; et, content de sa muse,
S'en va chercher ailleurs quelque fat qu'il abuse,
Car souvent il en trouve; ainsi qu'en sots auteurs,
Notre siècle est fertile en sots admirateurs;
Et, sans ceux que fournit la ville et la province,
Il en est chez le duc, il en est chez le prince.
Met with some zealous ass for its support;
And in all times a forward scribbling fop
Has found some greater fool to cry him up.

L'ouvrage le plus plat a, chez les courtisans,
De tout temps rencontré de zélés partisans;
Et, pour finir enfin par un trait de satire,
Un sot trouve toujours un plus sot qui l'admire.
CANTO II.

As a fair nymph, when rising from her bed,
With sparkling diamonds dresses not her head,
But without gold, or pearl, or costly scents,
Gathers from neighboring fields her ornaments;
Such, lovely in its dress, but plain withal,
Ought to appear a perfect Pastoral.

Its humble method nothing has of fierce,
But hates the rattling of a lofty verse;
There native beauty pleases and excites,
And never with harsh sounds the ear affrights.

But in this style a poet often spent,
In rage throws by his rural instrument,
And vainly, when disordered thoughts abound,
Amidst the eclogue makes the trumpet sound;
Pan flies alarmed into the neighboring woods,

TELL qu’une bergère, au plus beau jour de fête,
De superbes rubis ne charge point sa tête,
Et, sans mêler à l’or l’éclat des diamans,
Cueille en un champ voisin ses plus beaux ornemens;
Telle, aimable en son air, mais humble dans son style,
Doit éclater sans pompe une élégante idylle.
Son tour simple et naïf n’a rien de fastueux,
Et n’aime point l’orgueil d’un vers présomptueux;
Il faut que sa douceur flatte, chatouille, éveille,
Et jamais de grands mots n’épouvante l’oreille.

Mais souvent dans ce style un rimeur aux abois
Jette là, de dépit, la flûte et le hautbois,
Et, follement pompeux dans sa verve indiscrète,
Au milieu d’une églogue entonne la trompette;
De peur de l’écouter, Pan fuit dans les roseaux,
And frightened nymphs dive down into the floods.
Opposed to this, another, low in style,
Makes shepherds speak a language low and vile;
His writings, flat and heavy, without sound,
Kissing the earth and creeping on the ground;
You'd swear that Randal, in his rustic strains,
Again was quavering to the country swains,
And changing, without care of sound or dress,
Strephon and Phyllis into Tom and Bess.

'Twixt these extremes 'tis hard to keep the right;
For guides take Virgil and read Theocrite;
Be their just writings, by the gods inspired,
Your constant pattern, practised and admired.
By them alone you'll easily comprehend
How poets without shame may condescend
To sing of gardens, fields, of flowers and fruit,
To stir up shepherds and to tune the flute;
Of love's rewards to tell the happy hour,

Et les nymphes, d'effroi, se cachent sous les eaux.

Au contraire cet autre, abject en son langage,
Fait parler ses bergers comme on parle au village;
Ses vers plats et grossiers, dépouillés d'agrément,
Toujours baisent la terre, et rampent tristement;
On dirait que Ronsard, sur ses pipeaux rustiques,
Vient encore fredonner ses idylles gothiques,
Et changer, sans respect de l'oreille et du son,
Lycidas en Pierrot, et Philis en Toinon.

Entre ces deux excès la route est difficile;
Suivez, pour la trouver, Théocrite et Virgile;
Que leurs tendres écrits, par les Grâces dictés,
Ne quittent point vos mains, jour et nuit feuilletés.
Seuls, dans leurs doctes vers, ils pourront vous apprendre
Par quel art sans bassesse un auteur peut descendre;
Chanter Flore, les champs, Pomone, les vergers;
Au combat de la flûte animer deux bergers;
Des plaisirs de l'amour vanter la douce amorce;
Daphne a tree, Narcissus make a flower,
And by what means the eclogue yet has power
To make the woods worthy a conqueror;
This of their writings is the grace and flight;
Their risings lofty, yet not out of sight.

The Elegy, that loves a mournful style,
With unbound hair weeps at a funeral pile;
It paints the lover's torments and delights,
A mistress flatters, threatens, and invites;
But well these raptures if you'll make us see,
You must know love as well as poetry.

I hate those lukewarm authors, whose forced fire
In a cold style describes a hot desire;
That sigh by rule, and, raging in cold blood,
Their sluggish muse whip to an amorous mood.
Their feigned transports appear but flat and vain;
They always sigh, and always hug their chain,
Adore their prisons and their sufferings bless,

Changer Narcisse en fleur, couvrir Daphné d'écorce;
Et par quel art encor l'église quelquefois
Rend dignes d'un consul la campagne et les bois.
Telle est de ce poème et la force et la grâce.

D'un ton un peu plus haut, mais pourtant sans audace,
La plaintive élégie, en longs habits de deuil,
Sait, les cheveux épars, gémir sur un cercueil.
Elle peint des amans la joie et la tristesse;
Flatte, menace, irrité, apaise une mattrisse.
Mais, pour bien exprimer ces caprices heureux,
C'est peu d'être poète, il faut être amoureux.

Je hais ces vains auteurs, dont la muse forcée
M'entretient de ses feux, toujours froide et glacée;
Qui s'affligent par art, et, fous de sens rassis,
S'érigent, pour rimer, en amoureux transis.

Leurs transports les plus doux ne sont que phrases vaines;
Ils ne savent jamais que se charger de chaînes,
Que bénir leur martyr, adorer leur prison,
Make sense and reason quarrel as they please.
'Twas not of old in this affected tone
That smooth Tibullus made his amorous moan,
Nor Ovid, when, instructed from above,
By nature's rule he taught the art of love.
The heart in elegies forms the discourse. ✓
- The Ode is bolder and has greater force;
Mounting to heaven in her ambitious flight,
Amongst the gods and heroes takes delight;
Of Pisa's wrestlers tells the sinewy force,
And sings the dusty conqueror's glorious course;
To Simois' streams does fierce Achilles bring,
And makes the Ganges bow to Britain's king.
Sometimes she flies like an industrious bee,
And robs the flowers by nature's chemistry,
Describes the shepherd's dances, feasts, and bliss,
And boast from Phyllis to surprise a kiss,
'When gently she resists with feigned remorse,

Et faire quereller les sens et la raison.
Ce n'étoit pas jadis sur ce ton ridicule.
Qu'Amour dictoit les vers que soupiroit Tibulle,
Ou que du tendre Ovide animant les doux sons,
Il donnoit de son art les charmantes leçons.
Il faut que le cœur seul parle dans l'élegie.
- L'ode, avec plus d'éclat, et non moins d'énergie,
Élevant jusqu'au ciel son vol ambitieux,
Entretient dans ses vers commerce avec les dieux;
Aux athlètes dans Pise elle ouvre la barrière,
Chante un vainqueur poudreux au bout de la carrière;
Mène Achille sanglant au bord du Simois,
Ou fait fléchir l'Escaut sous le joug de Louis.
Tantôt, comme une abeille ardente à son ouvrage,
Elle s'en va de fleurs dépouiller le rivage;
Elle peint les festins, les danses et les ris;
Vante un baiser cueilli sur les lèvres d'Iris,
'Qui mollement résiste, et, par un doux caprice,
That what she grants may seem to be by force.'
Her generous style at random oft will part,
And by a brave disorder shows her art.

Unlike those fearful poets, whose cold rime
In all their raptures keeps exactest time;
That sing the illustrious hero's mighty praise—
Lean writers!—by the terms of weeks and days,
And dare not from least circumstances part,
But take all towns by strictest rules of art.
Apollo drives those fops from his abode;
And some have said that once the humorous god
Resolving all such scribblers to confound,

For the short Sonnet ordered this strict bound,
Set rules for the just measure and the time,
The easy running and alternate rime;
But, above all, those licenses denied

Quelquefois le refuse, afin qu'on le ravisse.'
Son style impétueux souvent marche au hasard;
Chez elle un beau désordre est un effet de l'art.

Loin ces rimeurs crainfis, dont l'esprit flématique
Garde dans ses fureurs un ordre didactique;
Qui, chantant d'un héros les progrès éclatans,
Maigres historiens, suivront l'ordre des temps.
Ils n'osent un moment perdre un sujet de vue;
Pour prendre Dôle, il faut que Lille soit rendue,
Et que leur vers, exact ainsi que Mézerai,
Ait fait déjà tomber les remparts de Courtrai.

Apollon de son feu leur fut toujours avare.
On dit, à ce propos, qu'un jour ce dieu bizarre,
Voulant pousser à bout tous les rimeurs français,
Inventa du sonnet les rigoureuses lois;
Voulut qu'en deux quatrains de mesure pareille,
La rime avec deux sons frappât huit fois l'oreille;
Et qu'ensuite six vers artidement rangés
Fussent en deux tercets par le sens partagés.
Surtout de ce poème il bannit la licence:
Which in these writings the lame sense supplied,
Forbade a useless line should find a place,
Or a repeated word appear with grace.
A faultless sonnet, finished thus, would be Worth tedious volumes of loose poetry.
A hundred scribbling authors, without ground,
Believe they have this only phœnix found,
When yet the exactest scarce have two or three,
Among whole tomes, from faults and censure free;
The rest, but little read, regarded less,
Are shoveled to the pastry from the press.
Closing the sense within the measured time,
'Tis hard to fit the reason to the rime.
'The Epigram, with little art composed,
Is one good sentence in a distich closed.
These points that by Italians first were prized,
Our ancient authors knew not, or despised;
The vulgar, dazzled with their glaring light,

Lui-même en mesura le nombre et la cadence;
Défendit qu’un vers foible y pût jamais entrer,
Ni qu’un mot déjà mis osât s’y remontrer.
Du reste, il l’enrichit d’une beauté suprême;
Un sonnet sans défauts vaut seul un long poème.
Mais en vain mille auteurs y pensent arriver;
Et cet heureux phénix est encore à trouver;
A peine dans Gombaut, Maynard et Malleville
En peut-on admirer deux ou trois entre mille;
Le reste, aussi peu lu que ceux de Pelletier,
N’a fait de chez Sercy qu’un saut chez l’épicier.
Pour enfermer son sens dans la borne prescrite,
La mesure est toujours trop longue et trop petite.
L’épigramme, plus libre en son tour plus borné,
N’est souvent qu’un bon mot de deux rimes orné.
Jadis de nos auteurs les pointes ignorées
Furent de l’Italie en nos vers attirées.
Le vulgaire, ébloui de leur faux agrément,
To their false pleasures quickly they invite;
But public favor so increased their pride,
They overwhelmed Parnassus with their tide.

The Madrigal at first was overcome,
And the proud Sonnet fell by the same doom;
With these grave Tragedy adorned her flights,
And mournful Elegy her funeral rites;
A hero never failed them on the stage,
Without his point a lover durst not rage;
The amorous shepherds took more care to prove
True to his point, than faithful to their love.
Each word, like Janus, had a double face,
And prose, as well as verse, allowed it place;
The lawyer with conceits adorned his speech,
The parson without quibbling could not preach.

At last affronted reason looked about,
And from all serious matters shut them out,
Declared that none should use them without shame,

A ce nouvel appât courut avidement;
La faveur du public excitant leur audace,
Leur nombre impétueux inonda le Parnasse.

Le madrigal d'abord en fut enveloppé;
Le sonnet orgueilleux lui-même en fut frappé;
La tragédie en fit ses plus chères délices;
L'élegie en orna ses douloureux caprices;

Un hérois sur la scène eut soin de s'en parer,
Et sans pointe un amant n'osa plus soupirer:
On vit tous les bergers, dans leurs plaintes nouvelles.
Fidèles à la pointe encore plus qu'à leurs belles;
Chaque mot eut toujours deux visages divers;

La prose la reçut aussi bien que les vers;
L'avocat au palais en hérisso son style,
Et le docteur en chaire en sema l'Évangile.

La raison outragée enfin ouvrit les yeux,
La chassa pour jamais des discours sérieux;
Et, dans tous ces écrits la déclarant insâme,
Except a scattering in the epigram —
Provided that by art, and in due time,
They turned upon the thought, and not the rime.
Thus in all parts disorders did abate;
Yet quibblers in the court had leave to prate,
Insipid jesters and unpleasant fools,
A corporation of dull punning drolls.
'Tis not but that sometimes a dextrous muse
May with advantage a turned sense abuse,
And on a word may trifle with address;
But above all avoid the fond excess,
And think not, when your verse and sense are lame,
With a dull point to tag your epigram.

Each poem his perfection has apart:
The British Round in plainness shows his art;
The Ballad, though the pride of ancient time,
Has often nothing but his humorous rime;
The Madrigal may softer passions move,

Par grace lui laissa l'entrée en l'épigramme,
Pourvu que sa finesse, éclatant à propos,
Roulât sur la pensée, et non pas sur les mots.
Ainsi de toutes parts les désordres cessèrent.
Toutefois à la cour les Turlupins restèrent,
Insipides plaisans, bouffons infortunés,
D'un jeu de mots grossier partisans surannés.
Ce n'est pas quelquefois qu'une muse un peu fine
Sur un mot, en passant, ne joue et ne badine,
Et d'un sens détourné n'abuse avec succès;
Mais fuyez sur ce point un ridicule excès,
Et n'allez pas toujours d'une pointe frivole
Aiguisez par la queue une épigramme folle.

Tout poème est brillant de sa propre beauté:
Le rondeau, né gaulois, a la naïveté;
La ballade, asservie à ses vieilles maximes,
Souvent doit tout son lustre au caprice des rimes;
Le madrigal, plus simple et plus noble en son tour,
And breathe the tender ecstasies of love.
Desire to show itself, and not to wrong,
Armed Virtue first with Satire in its tongue.
Lucilius was the man, who, bravely bold,
To Roman vices did this mirror hold,
Protected humble goodness from reproach,
Showed worth on foot, and rascals in the coach.
Horace his pleasing wit to this did add,
And none uncensured could be fool or mad;
Unhappy was that wretch whose name might be
Squared to the rules of their sharp poetry!
Persius obscure, but full of sense and wit,
Affected brevity in all he writ,
And Juvenal, learned as those times could be,
Too far did stretch his sharp hyperbole;
Though horrid truths through all his labors shine,
In what he writes there's something of divine,—
Whether he blames the Caprean debauch,

Respire la douceur, la tendresse et l'amour.
L'ardeur de se montrer, et non pas de médire,
Arma la Vérité du vers de la satire.
Lucile le premier osa la faire voir,
Aux vices des Romains présenta le miroir,
Vengea l'humble vertu de la richesse altière,
Et l'honnête homme à pied du faquin en litière.
Horace à cette aigreur mêla son enjouement;
On ne fut plus ni fat ni sot impunément;
Et malheur à tout nom qui, propre à la censure,
Put entrer dans un vers sans rompre la mesure!
Perse, en ses vers obscurs, mais serrés et pressans,
Affecta d'enfermer moins de mots que de sens.
Juvénal, élevé dans les cris de l'école,
Poussa jusqu'à l'excès sa mordante hyperbole;
Ses ouvrages, tous pleins d'affreuses vérités,
Étincellent pourtant de sublimes beautés,—
Soit que, sur un écrit arrivé de Caprée,
Or of Sejanus' fall tells the approach;
Or that he makes the trembling senate come
To the stern tyrant to receive their doom;
Or Roman vice in coarsest habits shows,
And paints an empress reeking from the stews,
In all he writes appears a noble fire;
To follow such a master then desire.

Chaucer alone, fixed on this solid base,
In his old style conserves a modern grace,
Too happy, if the freedom of his rimes
Offended not the method of our times.
The Latin writers decency neglect,
But modern authors challenge our respect,
And at immodest writings take offense,
If clean expression cover not the sense.
I love sharp satire from obscenity free,
Not impudence that preaches modesty.

Il brise de Séjan la statue adorée,
Soit qu'il fasse au conseil courir les sénateurs,
D'un tyran soupçonneux pâles adulateurs,
Ou que, poussant à bout la luxure latine,
Aux portefaix de Rome il vende Messaline,
Ses écrits pleins de feu partout brillent aux yeux.

De ces maîtres savants disciple ingénieux,
Régnier, seul parmi nous formé sur leurs modèles,
Dans son vieux style encore a des graces nouvelles;
Heureux, si ses discours, craints du chaste lecteur,
Ne se sentoient des lieux où fréquentoit l'auteur,
Et si, du son hardi de ses rimes cyniques,
Il n'alarmoit souvent les oreilles pudiques!

Le latin, dans les mots, brave l'honnêteté,
Mais le lecteur français veut être respecté;
Du moindre sens impur la liberté l'outrage,
Si la pudeur des mots n'en adoucit l'image.
Je veux dans la satire un esprit de candeur,
Et fuis un effronté qui prêche la pudeur.
Our English, who in malice never fail,
Hence in Lampoons and Libels learn to rail,—
Pleasant detraction, that by singing goes
From mouth to mouth, and as it marches grows;
Our freedom in our poetry we see,
That child of joy begot by liberty.
But, vain blasphemer, tremble when you choose
God for the subject of your impious muse;
At last those jests which libertines invent
Bring the lewd author to just punishment.
Even in a song there must be art and sense;
Yet sometimes we have seen that wine or chance
Has warmed cold brains, and given dull writers mettle,
And furnished out a scene for Mr. Settle.
But for one lucky hit that made thee please,
Let not thy folly grow to a disease,
Nor think thyself a wit; for in our age
If a warm fancy does some fop engage,

D'un trait de ce poème en bons mots si fertile,
Le François, né malin, forma le vaudeville,
Agréable indiscret, qui, conduit par le chant,
Passe de bouche en bouche et s'accroit en marchant;
La liberté française en ses vers se déploie;
Cet enfant de plaisir veut naître dans la joie.
Toutefois n'allez pas, goguenard dangereux,
Faire Dieu le sujet d'un badinage affreux;
A la fin tous ces jeux que l'athéisme élève,
Conduisent tristement le plaisant à la Grève.
Il faut, même en chansons, du bon sens et de l'art;
Mais pourtant on a vu le vin et le hasard
Inspirer quelquefois une muse grossière,
Et fournir, sans génie, un couplet à Linière.
Mais pour un vain bonheur qui vous a fait rimer,
Gardez qu'un sot orgueil ne vous vienne enfumer.
Souvent l'auteur altier de quelque chansonnette
Au même instant prend droit de se croire poète;
He neither eats nor sleeps till he has writ,
But plagues the world with his adulterate wit.
Nay 'tis a wonder if, in his dire rage,
He prints not his dull follies for the stage,
And, in the front of all his senseless plays,
Makes David Loggan crown his head with bays.

Il ne dormira plus qu'il n'a fait un sonnet;
Il met tous les matins six impromptus au net.
Encore est-ce un miracle, en ses vagues furies,
Si bientôt, imprimant ses sottes rêveries,
Il ne se fait graver au-devant du recueil,
Couronné de lauriers par la main de Nanteuil.
CANTO III.

THERE'S not a monster bred beneath the sky,
   But, well-disposed by art, may please the eye;
A curious workman, by his skill divine,
From an ill object makes a good design.
Thus to delight us, Tragedy, in tears
For Ædipus, provokes our hopes and fears;
For parricide Orestes asks relief,
And to increase our pleasure, causes grief.
You then that in this noble art would rise,
Come and in lofty verse dispute the prize.
Would you upon the stage acquire renown,
And for your judges summon all the town?
Would you your works forever should remain,
And after ages past be sought again?
In all you write observe with care and art

IL n'est point de serpent ni de monstre odieux,
   Qui, par l'art imité, ne puisse plaire aux yeux;
D'un pinceau délicat l'artifice agréable
Du plus affreux objet fait un objet aimable.
Ainsi, pour nous charmer, la tragédie en pleurs
D'Œdipe tout sanglant fit parler les douleurs,
D'Oreste parricide exprima les alarmes,
Et, pour nous divertir, nous arracha des larmes.

Vous donc, qui d'un beau feu pour le théâtre épris,

Venez en vers pompeux y disputer le prix,
Voulez-vous sur la scène étaler des ouvrages
Où tout Paris en foule apporte ses suffrages,
Et qui, toujours plus beaux, plus ils sont regardés,
Soient au bout de vingt ans encor redemandés?
Que dans tous vos discours la passion émue

185
To move the passions and incline the heart.
If in a labored act, the pleasing rage
Cannot our hopes and fears by turns engage,
Nor in our mind a feeling pity raise,
In vain with learned scenes you fill your plays;
Your cold discourse can never move the mind
Of a stern critic, naturally unkind,
Who, justly tired with your pedantic flight,
Or falls asleep or censures all you write.
The secret is, attention first to gain,
To move our minds and then to entertain,
That, from the very opening of the scenes,
The first may show us what the author means.

I'm tired to see an actor on the stage
That knows not whether he's to laugh or rage;
Who, an intrigue unraveling in vain,
Instead of pleasing keeps my mind in pain.
I'd rather much the nauseous dunce should say

Aille chercher le cœur, l'échauffe et le remue.
Si d'un beau mouvement l'agréable furie
Souvent ne nous remplit d'une douce terreur,
Ou n'excite en notre âme une pitié charmante,
En vain vous étalez une scène savante:
Vos froids raisonnements ne furent qu'attiédire
Un spectateur toujours paresseux d'applaudir,
Et qui, des vains efforts de votre rhétorique
Justement fatigué, s'endort ou vous critique.
Le secret est d'abord de plaire et de toucher;
Invenez des ressorts qui puissent m'attacher.

Que dès les premiers vers l'action préparée
Sans peine du sujet aplanisse l'entrée.
Je me ris d'un acteur qui, lent à s'exprimer,
De ce qu'il veut, d'abord ne sait pas m'informer,
Et qui, débroutillant mal une pénible intrigue,
D'un divertissement me fait une fatigue.

J'aimerois mieux encor qu'il déclinât son nom,
CANTO III.

34-51]  187

Downright, 'My name is Hector in the play,'
Than with a mass of miracles, ill-joined,
Confound my ears, and not instruct my mind.
The subject's never soon enough expressed.
Your place of action must be fixed, and rest.
A Spanish poet may with good event
In one day's space whole ages represent;
There oft the hero of the wandering stage
Begins a child, and ends the play of age.
But we, that are by reason's rule confined,
Will that with art the poem be designed,
That unity of action, time, and place,
Keep the stage full, and all our labors grace.

Write not what cannot be with ease conceived;
Some truths may be too strong to be believed.
A foolish wonder cannot entertain;
My mind's not moved if your discourse be vain.
You may relate what would offend the eye;

Et dit, 'Je suis Oreste ou bien Agamemnon,'
Que d'aller, par un tas de confuses merveilles
Sans rien dire à l'esprit, étourdir les oreilles:
Le sujet n'est jamais assez tôt expliqué.
Que le lieu de la scène y soit fixe et marqué.
Un rimeur, sans péril, delà les Pyrénées,
Sur la scène en un jour renferme des années;
Là souvent le héros d'un spectacle grossier,
Enfant au premier acte, est barbon au dernier.
Mais nous, que la raison à ses règles engage,
Nous voulons qu'avec art l'action se ménage;
Qu'en un lieu, qu'en un jour, un seul fait accompli
Tienne jusqu'à la fin le théâtre rempli.
Jamais au spectateur n'offrez rien d'incroyable;
Le vrai peut quelquefois n'être pas vraisemblable.
Une merveille absurde est pour moi sans appas;
L'esprit n'est point ému de ce qu'il ne croit pas.
Ce qu'on ne doit point voir, qu'un récit nous l'expose;
Seeing indeed would better satisfy,
But there are objects which a curious art
Hides from the eyes, yet offers to the heart.

The mind is most agreeably surprised,
When a well-woven subject, long disguised,
You on a sudden artfully unfold,
And give the whole another face and mold.

At first the Tragedy was void of art,
A song, where each man danced and sung his part,
And of god Bacchus roaring out the praise,
Sought a good vintage for their jolly days;
Then wine and joy were seen in each man's eyes,
And a fat goat was the best singer's prize.

Thespis was first, who, all besmeared with lee,
Began this pleasure for posterity,
And with his carted actors and a song
Amused the people as he passed along.

Les yeux en le voyant saisiroient mieux la chose,
Mais il est des objets que l'art judicieux
Doit offrir à l'oreille et reculer des yeux.

Que le trouble, toujours croissant de scène en scène,
A son comble arrivé se débrouille sans peine.
L'esprit ne se sent point plus vivement frappé
Que lorsqu'en un sujet d'intrigue enveloppé,
D'un secret tout à coup la vérité connue
Change tout, donne à tout une face imprévue.

La tragédie, informe et grossière en naissant,
N'était qu'un simple chœur, où chacun, en dansant
Et du dieu des raisins entonnant les louanges,
S'efforçait d'attirer de fertiles vendanges.
Là, le vin et la joie éveillant les esprits,
Du plus habile chantre un bouc étoit le prix.
Thespis fut le premier qui, barbouillé de lie,
Promena par les bourgs cette heureuse folie,
Et, d'acteurs mal ornés chargeant un tombereau,
Amusa les passans d'un spectacle nouveau.
Next Æschylus the different persons placed,
And with a better mask his players graced,
Upon a theatre his verse expressed,
And showed his hero with a buskin dressed.
Then Sophocles, the genius of his age,
Increased the pomp and beauty of the stage,
Engaged the Chorus song in every part,
And polished rugged verse by rules of art;
He in the Greek did those perfections gain
Which the weak Latin never could attain.

Our pious fathers, in their priest-rid age,
As impious and profane abhorred the stage.
A troop of silly pilgrims, as 'tis said,
Foolishly zealous, scandalously played,
Instead of heroes and of love's complaints,
The angels, God, the Virgin, and the saints.
At last right reason did his laws reveal,
And showed the folly of their ill-placed zeal,
Silenced those nonconformists of the age,

Eschyle dans le chœur jeta les personnages,
D'un masque plus honnête habilla les visages,
Sur les ais d'un théâtre en public exhaussé
Fit paroître l'acteur d'un brodequin chaussé.
Sophocle enfin, donnant l'essor à son génie,
Accrut encor la pompe, augmenta l'harmonie,
Intéressa le chœur dans toute l'action,
Des vers trop raboteux polit l'expression,
Lui donna chez les Grecs cette hauteur divine
Où jamais n'atteignit la foiblesse latine.

Chez nos dévots aieux le théâtre abhorré
Fut longtemps dans la France un plaisir ignoré.
De pélerins, dit-on, une troupe grossière
En public à Paris y monta la première;
Et, sottement zélée en sa simplicité,
Joua les Saints, la Vierge, et Dieu, par piété.
Le savoir, à la fin, dissipant l'ignorance,
And raised the lawful heroes of the stage;
Only the Athenian mask was laid aside,
And Chorus by the music was supplied.

Ingenious love, inventive in new arts,
Mingled in plays, and quickly touched our hearts;
This passion never could resistance find,
But knows the shortest passage to the mind.
Paint then, I'm pleased my hero be in love,
But let him not like a tame shepherd move;
Let not Achilles be like Thyrsis seen,
Or for a Cyrus show an Artamene;
That, struggling oft, his passions we may find
The frailty, not the virtue of his mind.

Of romance heroes shun the low design,
Yet to great hearts some human frailties join.
Achilles must with Homer's heart engage—
For an affront I'm pleased to see him rage;

Fit voir de ce projet la dévote imprudence.
On chassa ces docteurs prêchant sans mission;
On vit renattre Hector, Andromaque, Ilion;
Seulement, les acteurs laissant le masque antique,
Le violon tint lieu de chœur et de musique.

Bientôt l'amour, fertile en tendres sentiments,
S'empara du théâtre ainsi que des romans;
De cette passion la sensible peinture
Est pour aller au cœur la route la plus sûre.
Peignez donc, j'y consens, les héros amoureux,
Mais ne m'en formez pas des bergers douceux;
Qu'Achille aime autrement que Thyrsis et Philène;
N'allez pas d'un Cyrus nous faire un Artamène;
Et que l'amour, souvent de remords combattu,
Paraîsse une foiblesse et non une vertu.

Des héros de roman fuyez les petitesse;
Toutefois aux grands coeurs donnez quelques foiblesses.
Achille déplairoit, moins bouillant et moins pompt,
J'aime à lui voir verser des pleurs pour un affront;
Those little failings in your hero's heart
Show that of man and nature he has part.
To leave known rules you cannot be allowed;
Make Agamemnon covetous and proud,
Æneas in religious rites austere;
Keep to each man his proper character.
Of countries and of times the humors know,
From different climates different customs grow;
And strive to shun their fault, who vainly dress
An antique hero like a modern ass,
Who make old Romans like our English move,
Show Cato sparkish, or make Brutus love.
In a romance those errors are excused;
There 'tis enough that, reading, we're amused,
Rules too severe would there be useless found;
But the strict scene must have a jùster bound,
Exact decorum we must always find.
If then you form some hero in your mind,

A ces petits défauts marqués dans sa peinture,
L'esprit avec plaisir reconnaît la nature.
Qu'il soit sur ce modèle en vos écrits tracé;
Qu'Agamemnon soit fier, superbe, intéressé;
Que pour ses dieux Énée ait un respect austère;
Conservez à chacun son propre caractère.
Des siècles, de pays, étudiez les moeurs,
Les climats font souvent les diverses humeurs.
Gardez donc de donner, ainsi que dans Clélie,
L'air, ni l'esprit français à l'antique Italie;
Et, sous des noms romains faisant notre portrait,
Peindre Caton galant et Brutus dameret.
Dans un roman frivole aisément tout s'excuse;
C'est assez qu'en courant la fiction amuse,
Trop de rigueur alors seroit hors de saison;
Mais la scène demande une exacte raison,
L'étroite bienséance y veut être gardée.
D'un nouveau personnage inventez-vous l'idée?
Be sure your image with itself agree,
For what he first appears he still must be.
Affected wits will naturally incline
To paint their figures by their own design;
Your bully poets bully heroes write;
Chapman in Bussy D'Ambois took delight,
And thought perfection was to huff and fight.

Wise nature by variety does please;
Clothe differing passions in a differing dress:
Bold anger in rough haughty words appears;
Sorrow is humble and dissolves in tears.

Make not your Hecuba with fury rage,
And show a ranting grief upon the stage,
Or tell in vain how 'the rough Tanais bore
His sevenfold waters to the Euxine shore.'
These swollen expressions, this affected noise,
Shows like some pedant that declaims to boys.
In sorrow you must softer methods keep,

Qu'en tout avec soi-même il se montre d'accord,
Et qu'il soit jusqu'au bout tel qu'on l'a vu d'abord.

Souvent, sans y penser, un écrivain qui s'aime
Forme tous ses héros semblables à soi-même:
Tout a l'humeur gasconne en un auteur gascon;
Calprenède et Juba parlent du même ton.

La nature est en nous plus diverse et plus sage;
Chaque passion parle un différent langage:
La colère est superbe et veut des mots altiers;
L'abattement s'explique en des termes moins fiers.

Que devant Troie en flamme Hécube désolée
Ne vienne pas pousser une plainte ampoulée,
Ni sans raison décrire en quel affreux pays,
'Par sept bouches l'Euxin reçoit le Tanais.'
Tous ces pompeux amas d'expressions frivoles
Sont d'un déclamateur amoureux des paroles.
Il faut dans la douleur que vous vous abaissez;
Pour me tirer des pleurs, il faut que vous pleuriez.
And, to excite our tears, yourself must weep.
Those noisy words with which ill plays abound
Come not from hearts that are in sadness drowned.

The theatre for a young poet's rimes
Is a bold venture in our knowing times.
An author cannot easily purchase fame;
Critics are always apt to hiss and blame;
You may be judged by every ass in town —
The privilege is bought for half-a-crown.

To please, you must a hundred changes try,
Sometimes be humble, then must soar on high,
In noble thoughts must everywhere abound,
Be easy, pleasant, solid, and profound;
To these you must surprising touches join,
And show us a new wonder in each line;
That all, in a just method well-designed
May leave a strong impression in the mind.
These are the arts that tragedy maintain.

But the Heroic claims a loftier strain:

Ces grands mots dont alors l'acteur emplit sa bouche
Ne partent point d'un cœur que sa misère touche.

Le théâtre, fertile en censeurs pointilleux,
Chez nous pour se produire est un champ périlleux.
Un auteur n'y fait pas de faciles conquêtes;
Il trouve à le siffler des bouches toujours prêtes;
Chacun le peut traiter de fat et d'ignorant —
C'est un droit qu'à la porte on achète en entrant.
Il faut qu'en cent façons, pour plaire, il se replie,
Que tantôt il s'élève et tantôt s'humilie,
Qu'en nobles sentiments il soit partout fécond,
Qu'il soit aisé, solide, agréable, profond;
Que de traits surprenants sans cesse il nous réveille,
Qu'il coure dans ses vers de merveille en merveille;
Et que tout ce qu'il dit, facile à retenir,
De son ouvrage en nous laisse un long souvenir.
Ainsi la tragédie agit, marche, et s'explique.
In the narration of some great design
Invention, art, and fable all must join;
Here fiction must employ its utmost grace;
All must assume a body, mind, and face.
Each virtue a divinity is seen:
Prudence is Pallas, Beauty Paphos' queen;
'Tis not a cloud from whence swift lightnings fly,
But Jupiter that thunders from the sky;
Nor a rough storm that gives the sailor pain,
But angry Neptune plowing up the main;
Echo's no more an empty airy sound,
But a fair nymph that weeps her lover drowned.
Thus in the endless treasure of his mind
The poet does a thousand figures find,
Around the work his ornaments he pours,
And strews with lavish hand his opening flowers.
'Tis not a wonder if a tempest bore
The Trojan fleet against the Libyan shore;

D'un air plus grand encor la poésie épique,
Dans le vaste récit d'une longue action,
Se soutient par la fable, et vit de fiction.
Là pour nous enchanter tout est mis en usage;
Tout prend un corps, une âme, un esprit, un visage.
Chaque vertu devient une divinité:
Minerve est la prudence, et Vénus la beauté;
Ce n'est plus la vapeur qui produit le tonnerre,
C'est Jupiter armé pour effrayer la terre;
Un orage terrible aux yeux des matelots,
C'est Neptune en courroux qui gourmande les flots;
Écho n'est plus un son qui dans l'air retentisse,
C'est une nymphe en pleurs qui se plaint de Narcisse.
Ainsi, dans cet amas de nobles fictions,
Le poète s'égaye en mille inventions,
Orne, élève, embellit, agrandit toutes choses,
Et trouve sous sa main des fleurs toujours écloses.
Qu’Énée et ses vaisseaux, par le vent écartés,
From faithless fortune this is no surprise,
For every day 'tis common to our eyes.
But angry Juno, that she might destroy
And overwhelm the rest of ruined Troy;
That Æolus, with the fierce goddess joined,
Opened the hollow prisons of the wind;
Till angry Neptune, looking o'er the main,
Rebukes the tempest, calms the waves again,
Their vessels from the dangerous quicksands steers,—
These are the springs that move our hopes and fears.
Without these ornaments before our eyes
The unsinewed poem languishes and dies,
Your poet in his art will always fail,
And tell you but a dull insipid tale.

In vain have our mistaken authors tried
To lay these ancient ornaments aside,
 Thinking our God, and prophets that he sent,
 Might act like those the poets did invent,

Soient aux bords africains d'un orage emportés;
Ce n'est qu'une aventure ordinaire et commune,
Qu'un coup peu surprenant des traits de la fortune.
Mais que Junon, constante en son aversion,
Poursuive sur les flots les restes d'Ilión;
Qu'Éole, en sa faveur, les chassant d'Italie,
Ouvre aux vents mutinés les prisons d'Eolie;
Que Neptune en courroux, s'élevant sur la mer,
D'un mot calme les flots, mette la paix dans l'air,
Délivre les vaisseaux, des syrtes les arrache;
C'est là ce qui surprend, frappe, saisit, attache.
Sans tous ces ornemens le vers tombe en langueur,
La poésie est morte, ou rampe sans vigueur;
Le poète n'est plus qu'un orateur timide,
Qu'un froid historien d'une fable insipide.

C'est donc bien vainement que nos auteurs déçus,
Bannissant de leurs vers ces ornemens reçus,
Pensent faire agir Dieu, ses saints et ses prophètes,
To fright poor readers in each line with hell,
And talk of Satan, Ashtaroth, and Bel.
The mysteries which Christians must believe
Disdain such shifting pageants to receive;
The Gospel offers nothing to our thoughts
But penitence, or punishment for faults;
And mingling falsehoods with those mysteries,
Would make our sacred truths appear like lies.
Besides, what pleasure can it be to hear
The howlings of repining Lucifer,
Whose rage at your imagined hero flies,
And oft with God himself disputes the prize?

Tasso, you'll say, has done it with applause;
It is not here I mean to judge his cause,
Yet though our age has so extolled his name,
His works had never gained immortal fame,
If holy Godfrey in his ecstasies
Had only conquered Satan on his knees,

Comme ces dieux éclos du cerveau des poètes;
Mettent à chaque pas le lecteur en enfer;
N’offrent rien qu’Astaroth, Belzébuth, Lucifer.
De la foi d’un chrétien les mystères terribles
D’ornemens égayés ne sont point susceptibles;
L’Évangile à l’esprit n’offre de tous côtés
Que pénitence à faire et tourmens mérités;
Et de vos fictions le mélange coupable
Même à ses vérités donne l’air de la fable.
Et quel objet enfin à présenter aux yeux
Que le diable toujours hurlant contre les cieux,
Qui de votre héros veut rabaisser la gloire,
Et souvent avec Dieu balance la victoire!

Le Tasse, dira-t-on, l’a fait avec succès.
Je ne veux point ici lui faire son procès,
Mais, quoi que notre siècle à sa gloire publie,
Il n’eût point de son livre illustré l’Italie,
Si son sage héros, toujours en oraison,
If Tancred and Armida's pleasing form
Did not his melancholy theme adorn.
'Tis not that Christian poems ought to be Filled with the fictions of idolatry;
But in a common subject, to reject
The gods, and heathen ornaments neglect,
To banish Tritons who the seas invade,
To take Pan's whistle, or the Fates degrade,
To hinder Charon in his leaky boat
To pass the shepherd with the man of note,
Is with vain scruples to disturb your mind,
And search perfection you can never find.
As well they may forbid us to present
Prudence or Justice for an ornament,
To paint old Janus with his front of brass,
And take from Time his scythe, his wings, and glass,
And everywhere, as 'twere idolatry,
Banish descriptions from our poetry.

N'est fait que mettre enfin Satan à la raison,
Et si Renaud, Argant, Tancrède et sa maîtresse
N'eussent de son sujet égayé la tristesse.
Ce n'est pas que j'approuve, en un sujet chrétien,
Un auteur follement idolâtre et païen;
Mais, dans une profane et riante peinture,
De n'oser de la fable employer la figure,
De chasser les Tritons de l'empire des eaux,
D'ôter à Pan sa flûte, aux Parques leurs ciseaux,
D'empêcher que Caron, dans la fatale barque,
Ainsi que le berger ne passe le monarque,
C'est d'un scrupule vain s'alarmer sottement,
Et vouloir aux lecteurs plaire sans agrément.
Bientôt ils défendront de peindre la Prudence,
De donner à Thémis ni bandeu ni balance,
De figurer aux yeux la Guerre au front d'airain,
Ou le Temps qui s'enfuit une horloge à la main;
Et partout des discours, comme une idolâtrie,
Leave them their pious follies to pursue,
But let our reason such vain fears subdue,
And let us not, amongst our vanities,
Of the true God create a god of lies.

In fable we a thousand pleasures see,
And the smooth names seem made for poetry,—
As Hector, Alexander, Helen, Phyllis,
Ulysses, Agamemnon, and Achilles;
In such a crowd, the poet were to blame
To choose King Chilperic for his hero’s name.
Sometimes the name, being well or ill applied,
Will the whole fortune of your work decide.

Would you your reader never should be tired,
Choose some great hero, fit to be admired,
In courage signal, and in virtue bright;
Let even his very failings give delight;
Let his great actions our attention bind,
Like Cæsar or like Scipio frame his mind,

Dans leur faux zèle iront chasser l’allégorie.
Laissons-les s’applaudir de leur pieuse erreur;
Mais, pour nous, bannissons une vaine terreur,
Et, fabuleux chrétiens, n’allons point dans nos songes
Du Dieu de vérité faire un dieu de mensonges.

La fable offre à l’esprit mille agréments divers;
À tous les noms heureux semblent nés pour les vers,
Ulysse, Agamemnon, Oreste, Idoménée,
Hélène, Ménélas, Paris, Hector, Énée.

O le plaisant projet d’un poète ignorant,
Qui de tant de héros va choisir Childebrand!
D’un seul nom quelquefois le son dur ou bizarre
Rend un poème entier ou burlesque ou barbare.

Voulez-vous longtemps plaire, et jamais ne lasser?

Faites choix d’un héros propre à m’intéresser,
En valeur éclatant, en vertus magnifique;
Qu’en lui, jusqu’aux défauts, tout se montre héroïque;
Que ses faits surprenans soient dignes d’être ouls;
And not like Œdipus his perjured race;
A common conqueror is a theme too base.
Choose not your tale of accidents too full,
Too much variety may make it dull.
Achilles' rage alone, when wrought with skill,
Abundantly does a whole Iliad fill.

Be your narrations lively, short, and smart;
In your descriptions show your noblest art,
There 'tis your poetry may be employed.
Yet you must trivial accidents avoid,
Nor imitate that fool, who, to describe
The wondrous marches of the chosen tribe,
Placed on the sides, to see their armies pass,
The fishes staring through the liquid glass;
Described a child, who, 'with his little hand,
Picked up the shining pebbles from the sand.'
Such objects are too mean to stay our sight;
Allow your work a just and nobler flight.

Qu'il soit tel que César, Alexandre, ou Louis,
Non tel que Polynice et son perfide frère.
On s'ennuie aux exploits d'un conquérant vulgaire.
N'offrez point un sujet d'incidents trop chargé:
Le seul courroux d'Achille, avec art ménagé,
Remplit abondamment une Iliade entière;
Souvent trop d'abondance appauvrit la matière.

Soyez vif et pressé dans vos narrations;
Soyez riche et pompeux dans vos descriptions,
C'est là qu'il faut des vers étaler l'élegance;
N'y présentez jamais de basse circonstance.
N'imitez pas ce fou qui, décrivant les mers,
Et peignant, au milieu de leurs flots entr'ouverts,
L'Hébreu sauvé du joug de ses injustes maîtres,
Met, pour les voir passer, les poissons aux fenêtres;
Peint le petit enfant qui 'va, saute, revient,
Et joyeux à sa mère offre un caillou qu'il tient.'
Sur de trop vains objets c'est arrêter la vue.
Be your beginning plain; and take good heed
Too soon you mount not on the airy steed,
Nor tell your reader, in a thundering verse,
'I sing the conqueror of the universe.'
What can an author after this produce?
The laboring mountain must bring forth a mouse.
Much better are we pleased with his address,
Who without making such vast promises,
Says in an easier style and plainer sense,
'I sing the combats of that pious prince,
Who from the Phrygian coast his armies bore,
And landed first on the Lavinian shore.'
His opening muse sets not the world on fire,
And yet performs more than we can require.
Quickly you'll hear him celebrate the fame
And future glory of the Roman name,
Of Styx and Acheron describe the floods,
And Caesars wandering in the Elysian woods.

Donnez à votre ouvrage une juste étendue.
Que le début soit simple et n'ait rien d'affecté.
N'allez pas dès l'abord, sur Pégase monté,
Crier à vos lecteurs d'une voix de tonnerre,
'Je chante le vainqueur des vainqueurs de la terre.'
Que produira l'auteur après tous ces grands cris?
La montagne en travail enfante une souris.
Oh! que j'aime bien mieux cet auteur plein d'adresse
Qui, sans faire d'abord de si haute promesse,
Me dit d'un ton aisé, doux, simple, harmonieux,
'Je chante les combats, et cet homme pieux
Qui, des bords phrygiens conduit dans l'Ausonie,
Le premier aborda les champs de Lavinie.'
Sa muse en arrivant ne met pas tout en feu,
Et pour donner beaucoup, ne nous promet que peu.
Bientôt vous la verrez, prodiguant les miracles,
Du destin des Latins prononcer les oracles,
De Styx et d'Achéron peindre les noirs torrens,
With figures numberless your story grace,
And everything in beauteous colors trace;
At once you may be pleasing and sublime.
I hate a heavy melancholy rime;
I'd rather read Orlando's comic tale
Than a dull author always stiff and stale,
Who thinks himself dishonored in his style
If on his works the Graces do but smile.
'Tis said that Homer matchless in his art,
Stole Venus' girdle to engage the heart;
His works indeed vast treasures do unfold,
And whatsoever he touches turns to gold;
All in his hands new beauty does acquire;
He always pleases, and can never tire.
A happy warmth he everywhere may boast,
Nor is he in too long digressions lost;
His verses without rule a method find,
And of themselves appear in order joined;

Et déjà les Césars dans l'Élysée errans.
De figures sans nombre égayez votre ouvrage;
Que tout y fasse aux yeux une riante image;
On peut être à la fois et pompeux et plaisant,
Et je hais un sublime ennuyeux et pesant.
J'aime mieux Arioste et ses fables comiques
Que ces auteurs toujours froids et mélancoliques,
Qui dans leur sombre humeur se croiroient faire affront
Si les Grâces jamais leur déridoient le front.

On diroit que pour plaire, instruit par la nature,
Homère ait à Vénus dérobé sa ceinture.
Son livre est d'agrémens un fertile trésor,
Tout ce qu'il a touché se convertit en or;
Tout reçoit dans ses mains une nouvelle grâce;
Partout il diverti et jamais il ne lasse.
Une heureuse chaleur anime ses discours;
Il ne s'égare point en de trop longs détours;
Sans garder dans ses vers un ordre méthodique,
All without trouble answers his intent,
Each syllable is tending to the event.
Let his example your endeavors raise;
To love his writings is a kind of praise.

A poem where we all perfections find
Is not the work of a fantastic mind;
There must be care, and time, and skill, and pains,
Not the first heat of inexperienced brains.
Yet sometimes artless poets, when the rage
Of a warm fancy does their minds engage,
Puffed with vain pride, presume they understand,
And boldly take the trumpet in their hand;
Their fustian muse each accident confounds,
Nor can she fly, but rise by leaps and bounds;
Till, their small stock of learning quickly spent,
Their poem dies for want of nourishment.
In vain mankind the hot-brained fool decries,

Son sujet de soi-même et s'arrange et s'explique;
Tout, sans faire d'apprentis, s'y prépare aisément;
Chaque vers, chaque mot court à l'événement.
Aimez donc ses écrits, mais d'un amour sincère;
C'est avoir profité que de savoir s'y plaire.

Un poème excellent, où tout marche et se suit,
N'est pas de ces travaux qu'un caprice produit;
Il veut du temps, des soins; et ce pénible ouvrage
Jamais d'un écolier ne fut l'apprentissage.
Mais souvent parmi nous un poète sans art,
Qu'un beau feu quelquefois échauffa par hasard,
Enfant d'un vain orgueil son esprit chimérique,
Fière prend en main la trompette héroïque;
Sa muse, déréglée en ses vers vagabonds,
Ne s'élève jamais que par sauts et par bonds;
Et son feu, dépourvu de sens et de lecture,
S'éteint à chaque pas, faute de nourriture.
Mais en vain le public, prompt à le mépriser,
De son mérite faux le veut désabuser;
No branding censures can unveil his eyes;
With impudence the laurel they invade,
Resolved to like the monsters they have made.
Virgil, compared to them, is flat and dry,
And Homer understood not poetry.
Against their merit if this age rebel,
To future times for justice they appeal.
But, waiting till mankind shall do them right,
And bring their works triumphantly to light,
Neglected heaps we in bye-corners lay,
Where they become to worms and moths a prey;
Forgot, in dust and cobwebs let them rest,
Whilst we return from whence we first digressed.

The great success which tragic writers found
In Athens first the comedy renowned.
The abusive Grecian there, by pleasing ways,
Dispersed his natural malice in his plays;
Wisdom and virtue, honor, wit, and sense,

Lui-même, applaudissant à son maigre génie,
Se donne par ses mains l'encens qu'on lui dénie.
Virgile, au prix de lui, n'a point d'invention;
Homère n'entend point la noble fiction.
Si contre cet arrêt le siècle se rebelle,
A la postérité d'abord il en appelle.
Mais attendant qu'ici le bon sens de retour
Ramène triomphants ses ouvrages au jour,
Leur tas au magasin, cachés à la lumière,
Combattent tristement les vers et la poussière.
Laissons-les donc entre eux s'escrimer en repos,
Et, sans nous égarer, suivons notre propos.

Des succès fortunés du spectacle tragique
Dans Athènes naquit la comédie antique.
Là le Grec, né moqueur, par mille jeux plaisans,
Distilla le venin de ses traits médisans.
Aux accès insolens d'une bouffonne joie
La sagesse, l'esprit, l'honneur, furent en proie.
Were subject to buffooning insolence;
Poets were publicly approved and sought,
That vice extolled and virtue set at naught;
A Socrates himself, in that loose age,
Was made the pastime of a scoffing stage.
At last the public took in hand the cause,
And cured this madness by the power of laws,
Forbade, at any time or any place,
To name the persons or describe the face.
The stage its ancient fury thus let fall,
And comedy diverted without gall,
By mild reproofs recovered minds diseased,
And, sparing persons, innocently pleased.
Each one was nicely shown in this new glass,
And smiled to think he was not meant the ass.
A miser oft would laugh at first, to find
A faithful draught of his own sordid mind;
And fops were with such care and cunning writ,

On vit par le public un poète avoué
S'enrichir aux dépens du mérite joué;
Et Socrate par lui, dans un chœur de nuées,
D'un vil amas de peuple attirer les huées.
Enfin de la licence on arrêta le cours;
Le magistrat des lois emprunta le secours,
Et, rendant par édit les poètes plus sages,
Défendit de marquer les noms et les visages.
Le théâtre perdit son antique fureur;
La comédie apprit à rire sans aigreur,
Sans fiel et sans venin sut instruire et reprendre,
Et plut innocemment dans les vers de Ménandre.
Chacun, peint avec art dans ce nouveau miroir,
S'y vit avec plaisir, ou crut ne s'y point voir.
L'avare, des premiers, rit du tableau fidèle
D'un avare souvent tracé sur son modèle;
Et mille fois un satir, finement exprimé,
Méconnut le portrait sur lui-même formé.
They liked the piece for which themselves did sit.
You, then, that would the comic laurels wear,
To study nature be your only care.
Whoe'er knows man, and by a curious art
Discerns the hidden secrets of the heart;
He who observes, and naturally can paint
The jealous fool, the fawning sycophant,
A sober wit, an enterprising ass,
A humorous Otter, or a Hudibras,—
May safely in those noble lists engage,
And make them act and speak upon the stage.
Strive to be natural in all you write,
And paint with colors that may please the sight.
Nature in various figures does abound,
And in each mind are different humors found;
A glance, a touch, discovers to the wise,
But every man has not discerning eyes.
All-changing time does also change the mind,
And different ages different pleasures find.

Que la nature donc soit votre étude unique,
Auteurs qui prétendez aux honneurs du comique.
Quiconque voit bien l'homme, et d'un esprit profond,
De tant de cœurs cachés a pénétré le fond;
Qui sait bien ce que c'est qu'un prodigue, un avare,
Un honnête homme, un fat, un jaloux, un bizarre,
Sur une scène heureuse il peut les étaler,
Et les faire à nos yeux vivre, agir, et parler.
Présentez-en partout les images naïves;
Que chacun y soit peint des couleurs les plus vives.
La nature, féconde en bizarres portraits,
Dans chaque âme est marquée à de différents traits;
Un geste la découvre, un rien la fait paroître:
Mais tout esprit n'a pas des yeux pour la connaitre.
Le temps, qui change tout, change aussi nos humeurs;
Chaque âge a ses plaisirs, son esprit et ses mœurs.
Youth, hot and furious, cannot brook delay,
By flattering vice is easily led away;
Vain in discourse, inconstant in desire,
In censure rash, in pleasures all on fire.
The manly age does steadier thoughts enjoy;
Power and ambition do his soul employ;
Against the turns of fate he sets his mind,
And by the past the future hopes to find.
Decrepit age, still adding to his stores,
For others heaps the treasure he adores,
In all his actions keeps a frozen pace,
Past times extols, the present to debase;
Incapable of pleasures youth abuse,
In others blames what age does him refuse.
Your actors must by reason be controlled;
Let young men speak like young, old men like old.
Observe the town and study well the court,
For thither various characters resort.

Un jeune homme, toujours bouillant dans ses caprices,
Est prompt à recevoir l'impression des vices;
Est vain dans ses discours, volage en ses désirs,
Rétif à la censure, et fou dans les plaisirs.
L'âge viril, plus mûr, inspire un air plus sage,
Se pousse auprès des grands, s'invite, se ménage,
Contre les coups du sort songe à se maintenir,
Et loin dans le présent regarde l'avenir.
La vieillesse chagrine incessamment amasse;
Garde, non pas pour soi, les trésors qu'elle entasse;
Marche en tous ses desseins d'un pas lent et glacé;
Toujours plaint le présent et vante le passé;
Inhable aux plaisirs dont la jeunesse abuse,
Blâme en eux les douceurs que l'âge lui refuse.
Ne faites point parler vos acteurs au hasard,
Un vieillard en jeune homme, un jeune homme en vieillard.
Étudiez la cour et connoissez la ville;
L'une et l'autre est toujours en modèles fertile.
Thus 'twas great Jonson purchased his renown,
And in his art had borne away the crown,
If, less desirous of the people's praise,
He had not with low farce debased his plays,
Mixing dull buffoonry with wit refined,
And Harlequin with noble Terence joined.
When in the Fox I see the tortoise hissed,
I lose the author of the Alchemist.

The comic wit, born with a smiling air,
Must tragic grief and pompous verse forbear;
Yet may he not, as on a market-place,
With bawdy jests amuse the populace.
With well-bred conversation you must please,
And your intrigue unravelled be with ease;
Your action still should reason's rules obey,
Nor in an empty scene may lose its way.
Your humble style must sometimes gently rise,
And your discourse sententious be and wise,

C'est par là que Molière, illustrant ses écrits,
Peut-être de son art eût remporté le prix,
Si, moins ami du peuple, en ses doctes peintures
Il n'eût point fait souvent grimacer ses figures,
Quitté, pour le bouffon, l'agréable et le fin,
Et sans honte à Térence allié Tabarin.
Dans ce sac ridicule où Scapin s'enveloppe,
Je ne reconnais plus l'auteur du Misanthrope.

Le comique, ennemi des soupirs et des pleurs,
N'admet point en ses vers de tragiques douleurs;
Mais son emploi n'est pas d'aller, dans une place,
De mots sales et bas charmer la populace.
Il faut que ses acteurs badinent noblement;
Que son nœud bien formé se dénoue aisément;
Que l'action, marchant où la raison la guide,
Ne se perde jamais dans une scène vide;
Que son style humble et doux se relève à propos;
Qu'est ses discours, partout fertiles en bons mots,
The passions must to nature be confined,
And scenes to scenes with artful weaving joined.
Your wit must not unseasonably play,
But follow business, never lead the way.
Observe how Terence does this evil shun:
A careful father chides his amorous son;
Then see that son whom no advice can move,
Forget those orders, and pursue his love!
"Tis not a well-drawn picture we discover,
"Tis a true son, a father, and a lover.
I like an author that reforms the age,
And keeps the right decorum of the stage,
That always pleases by just reason's rule;
But for a tedious droll, a quibbling fool,
Who with low nauseous bawdry fills his plays,
Let him be gone, and on two trestles raise
Some Smithfield stage, where he may act his pranks,
And make Jack-Puddings speak to mountebanks.

Solent pleins de passions finement maniées,
Et les scènes toujours l'une à l'autre liées.
Aux dépens du bon sens gardez de plaisanter;
Jamais de la nature il ne faut s'écarter.
Contemplez de quel air un père dans Térence
Vient d'un fils amoureux gourmander l'imprudence;
De quel air cet amant écoute ses leçons,
Et court chez sa maîtresse oublier ces chansons.
Ce n'est pas un portrait, une image semblable;
C'est un amant, un fils, un père véritable.
J'aime sur le théâtre un agréable auteur
Qui, sans se diffamer aux yeux du spectateur,
Plaît par la raison seule, et jamais ne la choque;
Mais pour un faux plaisant, à grossière équivoque,
Qui, pour me divertir, n'a que la saleté.
Qu'il s'en aille, s'il veut, sur deux tréteaux monté,
Amusant le Pont Neuf de ses sonnettes fades,
Aux laquais assemblés jouer ses mascarades.
CANTO IV.

IN Florence dwelt a doctor of renown,
The scourge of God, and terror of the town,
Who all the cant of physic had by heart,
And never murdered but by rules of art.
The public mischief was his private gain:
Children their slaughtered parents sought in vain;
A brother here his poisoned brother wept;
Some bloodless died, and some by opium slept;
Colds, at his presence, would to frenzies turn,
And agues like malignant fevers burn.
Hated, at last, his practice gives him o'er;
One friend, unkill'd by drugs, of all his store,
In his new country-house affords him place—
('Twas a rich abbot, and a building ass).
Here first the doctor's talent came in play;
He seems inspired and talks like Wren or May;

DANS Florence jadis vivoit un médecin,
Savant hâbleur, dit-on, et célèbre assassin.
Lui seul y fit longtemps la publique misère:
Là le fils orphelin lui redemande un père,
Ici le frère pleure un frère empoisonné; 5
L'un meurt vide de sang, l'autre plein de sénè;
Le rhume à son aspect se change en pleurésie,
Et par lui la migraine est bientôt frénésie.
Il quitte enfin la ville, en tous lieux détesté.
De tous ses amis morts un seul ami resté 10
Le mène en sa maison de superbe structure;
C'étoit un riche abbé, fou de l'architecture.
Le médecin d'abord semble né dans cet art,
Of this new portico condemns the face,
And turns the entrance to a better place,
Designs the stair-case at the other end.
His friend approves, does for his mason send;
He comes; the doctor's arguments prevail;
In short, to finish this our humorous tale,
He Galen's dangerous science does reject,
And from ill doctor turns good architect.

In this example we may have our part;
Rather be mason ('tis a useful art)

Than a dull poet; for that trade accursed
Admits no mean betwixt the best and worst.
In other sciences, without disgrace,
A candidate may fill a second place,
But poetry no medium can admit,
No reader suffers an indifferent wit;

Dejà de bâtiments parle comme Mansard;
D'un salon qu'on élève il condamne la face;
Au vestibule obscur il marque une autre place;
Approuve l'escalier tourné d'autre façon.
Son ami le conçoit, et mande son maçon.
Le maçon vient, écoute, approuve, et se corrige.
Enfin, pour abréger un si plaisant prodige,
Notre assassin renonce à son art inhumain,
Et désormais, la règle et l'équerre à la main,
Laissez de Galien la science suspecte,
De méchant médecin devient bon architecte.

Son exemple est pour nous un précepte excellent.

Soyez plutôt maçon, si c'est votre talent,
Ouvrier estimé dans un art nécessaire,
Qu'écrivain du commun et poëte vulgaire.
Il est dans tout autre art des degrés différents,
On peut avec honneur remplir les seconds rangs;
Mais dans l'art dangereux de rimer et d'écrire,
Il n'est point de degrés du médiocre au pire;
Qui dit froid écrivain dit détestable auteur.
The ruined stationers against him bawl,
And Herringman degrades him from his stall.
Burlesque at least our laughter may excite,
But a cold writer never can delight.
The Counter-scuffle has more wit and art
Than the stiff formal style of Gondibert.

Be not affected with that empty praise
Which your vain flatterers will sometimes raise,
And, when you read, with ecstasy will say,
'The finished piece! the admirable play!'—
Which, when exposed to censure and to light,
Cannot endure a critic's piercing sight.
A hundred authors' fates have been foretold,
And Shadwell's works are printed, but not sold.

Hear all the world; consider every thought;
A fool by chance may stumble on a fault.
Yet, when Apollo does your muse inspire,
Be not impatient to expose your fire;

Boyer est à Pinchêne égal pour le lecteur;
On ne lit guère plus Rampale et Mesnardière
Que Magnon, Du Souhait, Corbin et La Morlière.
Un fou du moins fait rire, et peut nous égayer,
Mais un froid écrivain ne sait rien qu'ennuyer.
J'aime mieux Bergerac et sa burlesque audace
Que ces vers où Motin se morfond et nous glace.

Ne vous enivrez point des éloges flatteurs
Qu'un amas quelquefois de vains admirateurs
Vous donne en ces réduits, prompts à crier, Merveille!
Tel écrit récité se soutint à l'oreille,
Qui, dans l'impression au grand jour se montrant,
Ne soutient pas des yeux le regard pénétrant.
On sait de cent auteurs l'aventure tragique:
Et Gombaut tant loué garde encor la boutique.
Écoutez tout le monde, assidu consultant;
Un fat quelquefois ouvre un avis important.
Quelques vers toutefois qu'Apollon vous inspire,
Nor imitate the Settles of our times,
Those tuneful readers of their own dull rimes,
Who seize on all the acquaintance they can meet,
And stop the passengers that walk the street;
There is no sanctuary you can choose
For a defense from their pursuing muse.

I've said before, be patient when they blame;
To alter for the better is no shame.
Yet yield not to a fool's impertinence:
Sometimes conceited sceptics, void of sense,
By their false taste condemn some finished part,
And blame the noblest flights of wit and art.
In vain their fond opinions you deride,
With their loved follies they are satisfied,
And their weak judgment, void of sense and light,
Thinks nothing can escape their feeble sight.
Their dangerous counsels do not cure, but wound;
To shun the storm they run your verse aground,

En tous lieux aussitôt ne courez pas les lire.
Gardez-vous d'imiter ce rimeur furieux,
Qui, de ses vains écrits lectrice harmonieux,
Aborde en récitant quiconque le salue,
Et poursuit de ses vers les passans dans la rue.
Il n'est temple si saint, des anges respecté,
Qui soit contre sa muse un lieu de sûreté.

Je vous l'ai déjà dit, aimez qu'on vous censure,
Et, souple à la raison, corrigez sans murmure.

Mais ne vous rendez pas dès qu'un sot vous reprend.
Souvent dans son orgueil un subtil ignorant
Par d'injustes dégoûts combat toute une pièce,
Blâme des plus beaux vers la noble hardiesse.

On a beau réfuter ses vains raisonnemens,
Son esprit se complait dans ses faux jugemens;
Et sa foible raison, de clarté dépourvue,
Pense que rien n'échappe à sa débile vue.
Ses conseils sont à craindre; et, si vous les croyez,
And thinking to escape a rock, are drowned.
Choose a sure judge to censure what you write,
Whose reason leads, and knowledge gives you light,
Whose steady hand will prove your faithful guide,
And touch the darling follies you would hide;
He, in your doubts, will carefully advise,
And clear the mist before your feeble eyes.
'Tis he will tell you to what noble height
A generous muse may sometimes take her flight;
When, too much fettered with the rules of art,
May from her stricter bounds and limits part;
But such a perfect judge is hard to see,
And every rimer knows not poetry;
Nay, some there are for writing verse extolled,
Who know not Lucan's dross from Virgil's gold.
Would you in this great art acquire renown?
Authors, observe the rules I here lay down.
In prudent lessons everywhere abound,

Pensant fuir un écueil, souvent vous vous noyez.
Faites choix d'un censeur solide et salutaire,
Que la raison conduise et le savoir éclaire,
Et dont le crayon sûr d'abord aille chercher
L'endroit que l'on sent foible, et qu'on se veut cacher.
Lui seul éclaircira vos doutes ridicules,
De votre esprit tremblant lèvera les scrupules;
C'est lui qui vous dira par quel transport heureux
Quelquefois dans sa course un esprit vigoureux,
Trop resserré par l'art, sort des règles prescrites,
Et de l'art même apprend à franchir leurs limites.
Mais ce parfait censeur se trouve rarement;
Tel excelle à rimer qui juge sottement,
Tel s'est fait par ses vers distinguer dans la ville,
Qui jamais de Lucain n'a distingué Virgile.
Auteurs, prêtez l'oreille à mes instructions.
Voulez-vous faire aimer vos riches fictions?
Qu'en savantes leçons votre muse fertile
With pleasant join the useful and the sound;
A sober reader a vain tale will slight,
He seeks as well instruction as delight.

Let all your thoughts to virtue be confined,
Still offering nobler figures to our mind.
I like not those loose writers, who employ
Their guilty muse good manners to destroy,
Who with false colors still deceive our eyes,
And show us vice dressed in a fair disguise.

Yet do I not their sullen muse approve,
Who from all modest writings banish love.
That strip the play-house of its chief intrigue,
And make a murderer of Roderigue;
The lightest love, if decently expressed,
Will raise no vicious motions in our breast.
Dido in vain may weep, and ask relief;
I blame her folly whilst I share her grief.
A virtuous author, in his charming art,

Partout joigne au plaisant le solide et l'utile.
Un lecteur sage fuit un vain amusement,
Et veut mettre à profit son divertissement.

Que votre âme et vos mœurs, peintes dans vos ouvrages,
N'offrent jamais de vous que de nobles images:
Je ne puis estimer ces dangereux auteurs
Qui de l'honneur, en vers, infâmes déserteurs,
Trahissant la vertu sur un papier coupable,
Aux yeux de leurs lecteurs rendent le vice aimable.

Je ne suis pas pourtant de ces tristes esprits
Qui, bannissant l'amour de tous chastes écrits,
D'un si riche ornement veulent priver la scène,
Traitent d'empoisonneurs et Rodrigue et Chimène.
L'amour le moins honnête, exprimé chastement,
N'excite point en nous de honteux mouvement;
Didon a beau gémir et m'étaler ses charmes,
Je condamne sa faute en partageant ses larmes.
Un auteur vertueux, dans ses vers innocens,
To please the sense needs not corrupt the heart;
His heat will never cause a guilty fire;
To follow virtue then be your desire.
In vain your art and vigor are expressed,
The obscene expression shows the infected breast.

But, above all, base jealousies avoid,
In which detracting poets are employed.
A noble wit dares liberally commend,
And scorns to grudge at his deserving friend.
Base rivals, who true wit and merit hate,
Caballing still against it with the great,
Maliciously aspire to gain renown,
By standing up, and pulling others down.
Never debase yourself by treacherous ways,
Nor by such abject methods seek for praise.

Let not your only business be to write;
Be virtuous, just, and in your friends delight.
'Tis not enough your poems be admired,

Ne corrompt point le cœur en chatouillant les sens;
Son feu n'allume point de criminelle flamme.
Aimez donc la vertu, nourrissez-en votre âme;
En vain l'esprit est plein d'une noble vigueur,
Le vers se sent toujours des bassesses du cœur.

Fuyez surtout, fuyez ces basses jalousies,
Des vulgaires esprits malignes frénésies.
Un sublime écrivain n'en peut être infecté;
C'est un vice qui suit la médiocrité.
Du mérite éclatant cette sombre rivale

Contre lui chez les grands incessamment cabale,
Et, sur les pieds en vain tâchant de se hausser,
Pour s'égaler à lui, cherche à le rabaisser.
Ne descendons jamais dans ces lâches intrigues;
N'allons point à l'honneur par de honteuses brigues.

Que les vers ne soient pas votre éternel emploi;
Cultivez vos amis, soyez homme de foi.
C'est peu d'être agréable et charmant dans un livre,
But strive your conversation be desired.
Write for immortal fame, nor ever choose
Gold for the object of a generous muse.
I know a noble wit may, without crime,
Receive a lawful tribute for his time,
Yet I abhor those writers who despise
Their honor, and alone their profits prize,
Who their Apollo basely will degrade,
And of a noble science make a trade.

Before kind reason did her light display,
And government taught mortals to obey,
Men, like wild beasts, did nature's laws pursue,
They fed on herbs, and drink from rivers drew;
Their brutal force, on lust and rapine bent,
Committed murder without punishment.
Reason at last, by her all-conquering arts,
Reduced these savages, and tuned their hearts,
Mankind from bogs, and woods, and caverns calls,

Il faut savoir encore et converser et vivre.
Travaillez pour la gloire, et qu'un sordide gain
Ne soit jamais l'objet d'un illustre écrivain.
Je sais qu'un noble esprit peut, sans honte et sans crime,
Tirer de son travail un tribut légitime;
Mais je ne puis souffrir ces auteurs renommés,
Qui, dégoûtés de gloire, et d'argent affamés,
Mettent leur Apollon aux gages d'un libraire,
Et font d'un art divin un métier mercenaire.

Avant que la raison, s'expliquant par la voix,
Eût instruit les humains, eût enseigné des lois,
Tous les hommes suivoient la grossière nature,
Dispersés dans les bois couroient à la pature;
La force tenoit lieu de droit et d'équité;
Le meurtre s'exerçoit avec impunité.
Mais du discours enfin l'harmonieuse adresse
De ces sauvages mœurs adoucit la rudesse,
Rassembla les humains dans les forêts épars,
And towns and cities fortifies with walls;
Thus fear of justice made proud rapine cease,
And sheltered innocence by laws and peace.

These benefits from poets we received;
From whence are raised those fictions since believed,
That Orpheus, by his soft harmonious strains,
Tamed the fierce tigers of the Thracian plains;
Amphion's notes, by their melodious powers,
Drew rocks and woods, and raised the Theban towers.
These miracles from numbers did arise;
Since which, in verse heaven taught his mysteries,
And by a priest, possessed with rage divine,
Apollo spoke from his prophetic shrine.
Soon after, Homer the old heroes praised,
And noble minds by great examples raised;
Then Hesiod did his Grecian swains incline
To till the fields, and prune the bounteous vine.
Thus useful rules were, by the poet's aid,

Enferma les cités de murs et de remparts,
De l'aspect du supplice effraya l'insolence,
Et sous l'appui des lois mit la soible innocence.

Cet ordre fut, dit-on, le fruit des premiers vers.
De là sont nés ces bruits reçus dans l'univers,
Qu'aux accens dont Orphée emplit les monts de Thrace,
Les tigres amollis dépouilloient leur audace;
Qu'aux accords d'Amphion les pierres se mouvoient,
Et sur les murs thébains en ordre s'élevaient.
L'harmonie en naissant produisit ces miracles.
Depuis, le ciel en vers fit parler les oracles;
Du sein d'un prêtre ému d'une divine horreur,
Apollon par des vers exhala sa fureur.
Bientôt, ressuscitant les héros des vieux âges,
Homère aux grands exploits anima les courages.
Hésiode à son tour, par d'utiles leçons,
Des champs trop paresseux vint hâter les moissons.
En mille écrits fameux la sagesse tracée
In easy numbers to rude men conveyed,
And pleasingly their precepts did impart,
First charmed the ear, and then engaged the heart;
The Muses thus their reputation raised,
And with just gratitude in Greece were praised;
With pleasure mortals did their wonders see,
And sacrificed to their divinity.

But want, at last, base flattery entertained,
And old Parnassus with this vice was stained;
Desire of gain dazzling the poets' eyes,
Their works were filled with fulsome flatteries;
Thus needy wits a vile revenue made,
And verse became a mercenary trade.
Debase not with so mean a vice thy art;
If gold must be the idol of thy heart,
Fly, fly the unfruitful Heliconian strand!
Those streams are not enriched with golden sand;
Great wits, as well as warriors, only gain

Fut, à l'aide des vers, aux mortels annoncée;
Et partout des esprits ses préceptes vainqueurs,
Introduits par l'oreille, entrèrent dans les cœurs.
Pour tant d'heureux bienfaits, les Muses révérées
Furent d'un juste encens dans la Grèce honorées;
Et leur art, attirant le culte des mortels,
A sa gloire en cent lieux vit dresser des autels.

Mais enfin l'indigence amenant la bassesse,
Le Parnasse oublia sa première noblesse.
Un vil amour du gain, infectant les esprits,
de mensonges grossiers souilla tous les écrits;
Et partout, enfantant mille ouvrages frivoles,
Trafiqua du discours et vendit les paroles.

Ne vous flétrissez point par un vice si bas.
Si l'or seul a pour vous d'invincibles appas,
Fuyez ces lieux charmans qu'arrose le Permesse;
Ce n'est point sur ses bords qu'habite la richesse.
Aux plus savans auteurs, comme aux plus grands guerriers,
Laurels and honors for their toil and pain.
But what? an author cannot live on fame,
Or pay a reckoning with a lofty name:
A poet, to whom fortune is unkind,
Who when he goes to bed has hardly dined,
Takes little pleasure in Parnassus’ dreams,
Nor relishes the Heliconian streams;
Horace had ease and plenty when he writ,
And, free from cares for money or for meat,
Did not expect his dinner from his wit.
’Tis true; but verse is cherished by the great,
And now none famish who deserve to eat.
What can we fear when virtue, arts, and sense,
Receive the stars’ propitious influence,
When a sharp-sighted prince, by early grants,
Rewards your merits, and prevents your wants?
Sing then his glory, celebrate his fame;
Your noblest theme is his immortal name.
Let mighty Spenser raise his reverend head,

Apollon ne promet qu’un nom et des lauriers.
Mais quoi! dans la disette une muse affamée
Ne peut pas, dira-t-on, subsister de fumée;
Un auteur qui, pressé d’un besoin importun,
Le soir entend crier ses entrailles à jeun,
Goûte peu d’Hélicon les douces promenades:
Horace a bu son soûl quand il voit les Ménades,
Et, libre du souci qui trouble Colletet,
N’attend pas, pour diner, le succès d’un sonnet.
Il est vrai; mais enfin cette affreuse disgrâce
Rarement parmi nous afflige le Parnasse.
Et que craindre en ce siècle, où toujours les beaux arts
D’un astre favorable éprouvent les regards,
Où d’un prince éclairé la sage prévoyance
Fait partout au mérite ignorer l’indigence?
Muses, dictez sa gloire à tous vos nourrissons;
Son nom vaut mieux pour eux que toutes vos leçons.
Cowley and Denham start up from the dead,
Waller his age renew, and offerings bring;
Our monarch's praise let bright-eyed virgins sing:
Let Dryden with new rules our stage refine,
And his great models form by this design.
But where's a second Virgil, to rehearse
Our hero's glories in his epic verse?
What Orpheus sing his triumphs o'er the main,
And make the hills and forests move again;
Show his bold fleet on the Batavian shore,
And Holland trembling as his cannons roar,
Paint Europe's balance in his steady hand,
Whilst the two worlds in expectation stand
Of peace or war, that wait on his command?

But, as I speak, new glories strike my eyes,
Glories, which heaven itself does give and prize,
Blessings of peace; that with their milder rays

Que Corneille, pour lui rallumant son audace,
Soit encor le Corneille et du Cid et d'Horace;
Que Racine, enfantant des miracles nouveaux,
De ses héros sur lui forme tous les tableaux;
Que de son nom, chanté par la bouche des belles,
Benserade en tous lieux amuse les ruelles;
Que Segrays dans l'églogue en charme les forêts;
Que pour lui l'épitaphe aiguise tous ses traits.
Mais quel heureux auteur, dans une autre Énéide,
Aux bords du Rhin tremblant conduira cet Alcide?
Quelle savante lyre au bruit de ses exploits
Fera marcher encor les rochers et les bois;
Chantera le Batave, éperdu dans l'orage,
Soi-même se noyant pour sortir du naufrage,
Dira les bataillons sous Maastricht enterrés,
Dans ces affreux assauts du soleil éclairés?

Mais tandis que je parle, une gloire nouvelle
Vers ce vainqueur rapide aux Alpes vous appelle.
Déjà Dôle et Salins sous le joug ont ployé;
Adorn his reign and bring Saturnian days.
Now let rebellion, discord, vice, and rage,
That have in patriots' forms debauched our age,
Vanish with all the ministers of hell;
His rays their poisonous vapors shall dispel.
'Tis he alone our safety did create,
His own firm soul secured the nation's fate,
Opposed to all the boutefeus of the State.

Authors, for him your great endeavors raise;
The loftiest numbers will but reach his praise.

For me, whose verse in satire has been bred,
And never durst heroic measures tread,
Yet you shall see me in that famous field,
With eyes and voice my best assistance yield,
Offer you lessons that my infant muse
Learnt, when she Horace for her guide did choose,
Second your zeal with wishes, heart, and eyes,
And afar off hold up the glorious prize.
But, pardon too, if, zealous for the right,

Besançon fume encor sur son roc foudroyé.
Où sont ces grands guerriers dont les fatales ligues
Devoient à ce torrent opposer tant de digues?
Est-ce encore en fuyant qu'ils pensent l'arrêter,
Fiers du honteux honneur d'avoir su l'éviter?
Que de remparts détruits! Que de villes forcées!
Que de moissons de gloire en courant amassées!

Auteurs, pour les chanter redoublez vos transports;
Le sujet ne veut pas de vulgaires efforts.
Pour moi, qui, jusqu'ici nourri dans la satire,
N'ose encor manier la trompette et la lyre,
Vous me verrez pourtant, dans ce champ glorieux,
Vous animer du moins de la voix et des yeux;
Vous offrir ces leçons que ma muse au Parnasse
Rapporta, jeune encore, du commerce d'Horace;
Seconder votre ardeur, échauffer vos esprits,
Et vous montrer de loin la couronne et le prix.
A strict observer of each noble flight,
From the fine gold I separate the allay,
And show how hasty writers sometimes stray;
Apter to blame, than knowing how to mend;
A sharp, but yet a necessary friend.

Mais aussi pardonnez, si, plein de ce beau zèle,
De tous vos pas fameux observateur fidèle,
Quelquefois du bon or je sépare le faux,
Et des auteurs grossiers j'attaque les défauts;
Censeur un peu fâcheux, mais souvent nécessaire,
Plus enclin à blâmer que savant à bien faire.
NOTES.
NOTES.

HORACE.

11 ff. See Wickham, Works of Horace 2. 384: "We may distinguish perhaps three parts of the poem; but they pass naturally into one another, and a single thread binds them together in the repeated doctrine that poetry is an art, and as an art has rules, and supposes previous instruction and patient effort.

"Vv. 1-118 deal with general principles of poetry, unity of conception, choice of words, style of diction.

"Vv. 119-284. When from diction he passes to characters it soon becomes evident that, for some reason unexplained, he has dramatic poetry specially in view; and various points are touched in relation to it, some larger, some smaller; but the leading principle throughout is that the best Greek practice is to be the rule.

"Vv. 285-end. So we go back to what is applicable to all kinds of poetry,—the comparison of the Greek and Roman temperament, the two aims of poetry, the necessity of excellence, the poet's high calling, the need of training, the folly of wilfulness."

1 1-5. 'You expect a picture to represent something real, not incongruous and impossible combinations.'

1 1-9 This introductory figure was probably suggested by a remark of Socrates in Plato's Phaedrus 264 (Jowett, 2. 142): "At any rate, you will allow that every discourse ought to be a living creature, having its own body and head and feet; there ought to be a middle, beginning, and end, which accord with one another and with the whole?" Such a monstrosity as Horace describes is to be found in the Virgilian Scylla, Æn. 3. 426-428. Cf. also Triton, Æn. 3. 209-212, and Lucretius 5. 878 ff.

1 6-2 23. 'The same rule binds a poet. What he conceives (i.e. whether as a whole or in detail) must be possible and whole. This rule is violated by the "purple patch" system. Your beauties must be relevant. Remember always your purpose and its conditions.'
2 15. ‘Purple patches’ is used at least five times in Saintsbury’s History of Elizabethan Literature.

Thus many a bard describes in pompous strain
The clear brook babbling through the goodly plain,
The groves of Granta and her Gothic halls,
King’s Coll., Cam’s stream, stained windows, and old walls;
Or, in adventurous numbers, neatly aims
To paint a rainbow or — the river Thames.

2 23. Byron, Hints from Horace:

In fine, to whatsoever you aspire,
Let it at least be simple and entire.

3 24–31. ‘Blunders in this matter proceed from the common failing, the incapacity to avoid one mistake without falling into its opposite. One wants art even to escape faults.’

The greater portion of the rime of tribe
(Give ear, my friend, for thou hast been a scribe)
Are led astray by some peculiar lure,
I labor to be brief — become obscure;
One falls while following elegance too fast;
Another soars, inflated with bombast;
Too low, a third crawls on, afraid to fly,
He spins his subject to satiety;
Absurdly varying, he at last engravès
Fish in the woods, and boars beneath the waves!

3 31. Longinus, On the Sublime 33: “But supposing now that we assume the existence of a really unblemished and irreproachable writer. Is it not worth while to raise the whole question whether in poetry and prose we should prefer sublimity accompanied by some faults, or a style which, never rising above moderate eloquence, never stumbles and never requires correction? . . . Let us take an instance: Apollonius in his Argonautica has given us a poem actually faultless; and in his pastoral poetry Theocritus is eminently happy, except when he occasionally attempts another style. And what then? Would you rather be a Homer or an Apollonius? Or take Eratosthenes and his Erigone; because that little work is without a flaw, is he therefore a greater poet than Archilochus, with all his disorderly profusion? greater than that impetuous, that god-gifted genius, which chafed against the restraints of law? . . .”
HORACE.

3 32–37. 'It is the same in sculpture. It is easier to work up some details than to conceive a whole. But it is as in the human face: a crooked nose spoils the effect of good eyes and hair.'

3 32–36. Pope, Essay on Criticism 243–252:

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
Is not the exactness of peculiar parts;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all,
Thus when we view some well-proportioned dome
(The world's just wonder, and e'en thine, O Rome!),
No single parts unequally surprise,
All comes united to the admiring eyes;
No monstrous height or breadth or length appear;
The whole at once is bold and regular.

3 38–45. 'The key lies in choosing a subject within your powers. Once do that, and you will not fail either in finding plenty to say or in power to arrange it. By arrangement I mean knowing when to say a thing, when to omit or postpone it, the power to pick and choose.'

Thus rendered by Byron, Hints from Horace:

Dear authors! suit your topics to your strength,
And ponder well your subject and its length;
Nor lift your load, before you're quite aware
What weight your shoulders will, or will not, bear.
But lucid Order and Wit's siren voice
Await the poet skilful in his choice;
With native eloquence he soars along,
Grace in his thoughts and music in his song.
Let judgment teach him wisely to combine
With future parts the now omitted line;
This shall the author choose, or that reject,
Precise in style and cautious to select.

4 46–6 72. 'That must be exercised in respect of diction. It is a very happy knack to make an old word new by a skilful conjunction. You may also invent words if it be necessary; but it must be in moderation, and you will do well to go to Greek as your well-spring. The old poets invented words, why may not modern? Words, like other human things, have their day, and pass and change.'

4 46–5 69. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Nor slight applause will candid pens afford
To him who furnishes a wanting word.
Then fear not, if 'tis needful, to produce
Some term unknown, or obsolete in use,
(As Pitt has furnished us a word or two
Which lexicographers declined to do);
So you indeed, with care — but be content
To take this license rarely — may invent.
New words find credit in these latter days
If neatly grafted on a Gallic phrase.
What Chaucer, Spenser did, we scarce refuse
To Dryden’s or to Pope’s maturer muse.
If you can add a little, say why not,
As well as William Pitt and Walter Scott?
Since they, by force of rime and force of lungs,
Enriched our island’s ill-united tongues.
’Tis then — and shall be — lawful to present
Reform in writing, as in parliament.

448. Aristotle, Rhet. 3. 2: “But the deception which we have in view is successfully effected if words are chosen from ordinary parlance, and combined, as is the practice of Euripides, and indeed is the practice of which he was the first to set an example.” Look up Ruskin’s comment on Milton’s ‘blind mouths’ in Sesame and Lilies.

450. ‘The Cethegi’ is a concrete expression for ‘the ancients’ (Cethagus died B.C. 196; Horace lived B.C. 65–8). The best account of Cethagus will be found in Cicero, Brutus 15. 58–61 (On Oratory and Orators, in Bohn’s series, pp. 277–278); add Cicero On Old Age 14. 50. The idea of ‘high-girt’ is well illustrated by the statement of Cacciaguida, Dante’s great-great-grandfather, Paradiso 15. 97–135, but especially 112–113:

Bellincion Berti saw I go begirt
With leather and with bone.

553. Cicero agrees with Horace on this point; cf. his Limits of Good and Evil 3. 4. 15. And see Dryden, Discourse of Epic Poetry: “I will not excuse, but justify, myself for one pretended crime with which I am liable to be charged by false critics, not only in this translation, but in many of my original poems — that I Latinize too much. It is true that when I find an English word significant and sounding, I neither borrow from the Latin nor any other language; but when I want at home, I must seek abroad. If sounding words are not of our growth and manufacture, who shall hinder me to import them from a foreign country? I carry not out the treasure of the nation which is never to return, but what I bring from Italy I spend in England. Here it remains and here it circulates; for if the coin be good, it will pass from one hand to another. I trade both with the living. and the dead for the enrichment of our native language. We have enough in England to supply our necessity; but if we will have things of magnicence and splendor, we must get them by commerce. Poetry requires ornament, and that is not to be had from our old Teuton monosyllables.
Therefore, if I find any elegant word in a classic author, I propose it to be naturalized by using it myself; and if the public approves of it, the bill passes. But every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man, therefore, is not fit to innovate. Upon the whole matter, a poet must first be certain that the word he would introduce is beautiful in the Latin; and is to consider, in the next place, whether it will agree with the English idiom."

5 54. Cæcilius was a Frenchman (as we should now say), for whom see Cruttwell, Hist. Rom. Lit., pp. 48-49.

5 56. Cato (B.C. 234-149) was the ‘creator of Latin prose writing’
(see Cruttwell, pp. 91-98). Ennius (209-169) was ‘ the Father of Roman Poetry’ (see Cruttwell, pp. 58-62, 68-78).

5 60 ff. For the figure see Homer, Il. 6. 146-149; Ecclesiasticus 14. 18; Dante, Par. 26. 137-138. Dante probably imitates Horace, since he quotes line 70 in his Banquet (2. 14), and places Horace next to Homer in the Inferno (4. 89).

6 73-7 82. ‘The different types of poetry have been marked out by the Greek masters, and stamped with their appropriate metres; and we must keep to them.’

6 73-7 82. Byron, Hints from Horace:

The immortal wars which gods and angels wage,
Are they not shown in Milton’s sacred page?
His strain will teach what numbers best belong
To themes celestial told in epic song.
The slow, sad stanza will correctly paint
The lovers anguish or the friend’s complaint.
But which deserves the laurel— rime or blank?
Which holds on Helicon the higher rank?
Let squabbling critics by themselves dispute
This point, as puzzling as a Chancery suit.
Satiric rime first sprang from selfish spleen.
You doubt?— see Dryden, Pope, St. Patrick’s dean.
Blank verse is now, with one consent, allied
To Tragedy, and rarely quits her side.
Though mad Almanzor rimed in Dryden’s days,
No sing-song hero rants in modern plays,
NOTES.

Whilst modest Comedy her verse foregoes
For jest and pun in very middling prose.
Not that our Bens or Beaumonts show the worse
Or lose one point, because they wrote in verse.

675–78. The following account of the elegy is largely based upon Christ's statements in his Geschichte der griechischen Literatur (Müller's Handbuch der klassischen Alterthums-Wissenschaft 7. 92 ff.; cf. Gleditsch, Handbuch 2. 518). The derivation of the word 'elegy' is uncertain. If Greek, it probably comes from the refrain ἕλεγε ἕλεγε ἕλεγε (cf. Æschylus, Agam. 121); but it may be Phrygian, Carian, or ancient Armenian. The elegiac measure was first developed as melody only, before words were added; and this music was originally that of the flute. Later the poetry was either sung or recited. The unit of elegiac song or recitation was the distich, composed in dactylic verse. Its characteristic was the second line, which consisted of a Homeric hexameter abbreviated at its middle and end. This truncation gave the line a broken character which adapted it to the expression of grief, the pauses at the middle and end representing either the silence which follows a frantic outburst of sorrow, or the prolongation of the wail with which such a passionate exclamation would close. This line was preceded, in the distich, by a regular Homeric hexameter, and thus the couplet represented the alternations of uncontrollable grief and relative composure. The stately fluency of the hexameter, as contrasted with the interruptedness of the following pentameter, is well rendered in Coleridge's translation of Schiller's lines:

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

Here was the origin of the strophe; the first step toward the creation of the stanza was taken in thus forming the elegiac distich. Whoever was the inventor of the elegy as a form of poetry, it certainly originated in Asiatic Ionia. The invention is often attributed to Callinus (first half of the seventh century); but it must have been older, for he manipulates it with too much skill to have been the originator of it.

An interesting parallel to the alternation of long with shorter lines for elegiac purposes is furnished by the Hebrew elegy, as described in Driver's Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament, pp. 429–430: "The verse itself may consist of one or more members; but each member, which contains on an average of not more than five or six words, is divided by a casura into two unequal parts, the first being usually about the length of an ordinary verse-member, the second being decidedly shorter, and very often not parallel in thought to the first. An example or two, even in a translation, will make the character of the rhythm apparent:

Lam. 1, 1 How doth the city sit solitary,—she that was full of people!
She is become as a widow,—she that was great among the nations:
The princess among the provinces,—she is become tributary.

3. 1-3 I am the man that hath seen affliction—by the rod of his wrath:
Me hath he led and caused to go—in darkness and not in light:
Surely against me he ever turneth his hand—all the day.

... The first member, instead of being balanced and reinforced by the second (as is ordinarily the case in Hebrew poetry), is echoed by it imperfectly, so that it seems, as it were, to die away in it, and a plaintive, melancholy cadence is thus produced. ... It is, moreover, to be observed that the rhythm seems to be chosen intentionally, for in the context the ordinary poetical rhythm, with verse-members of equal length, is, as a rule, employed. ... Probably also the elegiac rhythm which has been described was accompanied by a corresponding plaintive melody, and in any case it was connected with mournful associations. ... Exquisite as is the pathos which breathes in the poetry of these dirges, they are thus, it appears, constructed with conscious art. They are not the unstudied effusions of natural emotion, they are carefully elaborated poems.”

The language of the earlier elegies was decidedly Homeric. According to Symonds (Greek Poets I. 15), the elegiac metre was first “used to express the emotions of love and sorrow, and afterwards came to be the vehicle of moral sentiment and all strong feeling. Callinus and Tyrtaeus adapted the elegy to songs of battle. Solon consigned his wisdom to its couplets, and used it as a trumpet for awakening the zeal of Athens against her tyrants. Mimnermus confined the metre to its more plaintive melodies, and made it the mouthpiece of lamentations over the fleeting beauty of youth and the evils of old age. In Theognis the elegy takes wider scope. He uses it alike for satire and invective, for precept, for autobiographic grumblings, for political discourses, and for philosophical apothegms.” And again (I. 68): “Three periods may be marked in the development of the early Greek elegiac poetry,—the martial, the erotic, and the gnomic.”

The original elegy of lamentation gave rise to the epigram, which was originally an epitaph. Allied to the erotic was the symposiac, or drinkingsong. Erotic elegy was revived in the Alexandrian period, and took on a learned cast. The most famous composer of the latter species is Callimachus. From Alexandria it passed to Rome, where we find it represented by Propertius, Catullus, and Ovid. The elegiac measure has been but little cultivated in English. The first who endeavored to reproduce it was Sir Philip Sidney, in his Arcadia. In our time it has been attempted by Swinburne, in the poem entitled Hesperia, which also has alternate rimes, and therefore does not represent the measure in its purity. The most famous of modern elegies are the Roman Elegies of Goethe.

The character of the Greek elegy is well summed up by Mahaffy, Hist. Greek Lit. 1. 158: “Perhaps there are three points, and three points only, which may be called permanent features in elegiac poetry. In the first place, it is personal, subjective as the Germans call it, and this feature comes out plainly enough even where the poet is discussing public topics, as in Solon’s elegies, or narrating epic myths, as Antimachus in his Lyde. Even these were strictly personal poems. In the second place, it is almost always secular, religious poetry being either hexameter or strictly lyric in form. Thirdly, it is Ionic, and except in the case of epigrams or epitaphs, which are always of a local color, is restricted to the dialect where it first arose.”

679. For Archilochus, see Symonds, Greek Poets 1. 98–104. Mahaffy says, Hist. Greek Lit. 1. 159: “In coarseness, terseness, and bitterness he may justly be called the Swift of Greek Literature.”

679–782. The remarks of Aristotle and Quintilian on the iambic will serve to elucidate these lines. Aristotle, Poet. 4. 9: “In these [the Margites and the like] the iambic metre appropriately appears, a satire being now called an iambic poem because it was in this metre that they satirized each other; and some of the old poets became writers of heroics, some of iambics.” Poet. 24. 5: “The iambic and trochaic are lively metres, the one suited for action, the other for dancing.” Poet. 4. 14: “The metre [of the drama] was changed from trochaic tetrameter to iambic trimeter. At the first the trochaic was used through its being proper to Satyric dramas, and better suited for dancing; but when style arose, Nature herself discovered the proper metre, the iambic being of all metres the most like prose, as is proved by the fact that in conversation with each other we employ iambics most of all metres, hexameter seldom, and only when we depart from the harmony of prose.” Aristotle, Rhet. 3. 1: “... The styles of prose and of poetry being distinct, as is shown by the fact that the writers of tragedies themselves have ceased to use the poetical style as once they did, and that, as they passed from the tetrameter to the iambic measure, as being the metre which bears the closest resemblance to prose,” etc. ... Rhet. 3. 8: “The iambic rhythm, on the other hand, is the very diction of ordinary life, and is therefore of all metres the most frequent in conversation; but it is deficient in dignity and impressiveness.” Quintilian, Institutes 9. 4. 136: “The elevated portions of a speech require long and sonorous syllables; they like the fulness of the dactyl also, and of the peon, which, though it consists mostly of short syllables, is yet sufficiently strong in times. Rougher parts, on the contrary, are best set forth in iambic feet, not only because they consist of only two syllables, and consequently allow of more frequent beats as it were, a quality opposed to calmness, but because every foot rises, springing and bounding from short to long, and is for that reason preferable to the trochee, which from a long falls to a short.” Cf. note on 19 251.

6 80. The sock and buskin are metaphorically used for comedy and tragedy.

7 83–85. Macleane’s note on the passage deserves to be quoted: “Though the flute (‘tibia’) came very early into use as an accompaniment to lyric poetry, it has always retained the name it originally derived from the lyre. The description of Horace includes the choral lyric of the Doric school and the poetry of the Æolic school. The former was adapted to a choir, the latter only to a single voice. The former was so called because it was cultivated by the Dorians of the Peloponnesus and Sicily; the latter flourished among the Æolians of Asia Minor, and particularly in the island of Lesbos. The one celebrated gods and heroes or renowned citizens, and was used at public festivals or at marriages and funerals; the other expressed individual thoughts and feelings. Alcæus and Sappho are the chief representatives of the latter school; of the former, Alcman and Stesichorus, Ibycus, Simonides, Bacchylides, and Pindar. Stesichorus and Ibycus were most celebrated for their poems on mythological subjects (‘divos puerosque deorum’), while Simonides and Pindar were the greatest in ἐπιγλῶσσα, hymns in honor of the victors at public games (‘et pugilem victorem et equum certamine primum’), and the poets of wine and passion (‘juvenum curas et libera vina’) were Alcæus, Sappho, Simonides, and Bacchylides. Horace does not mention one class of lyric poems, the threnes or dirges for the dead, of which Simonides was the greatest master.”

7 89–9 118. ‘So generally with respect to the style of diction. The comic and the tragic are distinct, though of course to a certain extent each borrows the tone of the other. This is owing to the larger law that emotion is only stirred by emotion, and the language must correspond to the emotion. Respect must be had, too, to the characters who are speaking.’

7 91. Who was Thyestes?
7 94. Chremes. A character in the Self-Tormentor of Terence. The passage referred to is probably Act 5, Scene 4.

8 96. Who were Telephus and Peleus?

'Tis not enough, ye bards, with all your art
To polish poems,—they must touch the heart;
Where'er the scene be laid, whate'er the song,
Still let it bear the hearer's soul along;
Command your audience or to smile or weep,
Whiche'er may please you—anything but sleep.
The poet gains our tears; but, by his leave,
Before I shed them, let me see him grieve.
If banished Romeo feigned nor sigh nor tear,
Lulled by his languor, I should sleep or sneer.

8 99. Cf. Aristotle, Rhet. 3. 7: "The conditions of propriety in a speech are that the style should be emotional and ethical and at the same time proportionate to the subject-matter.... A listener is always in sympathy with an emotional speaker, even though what he says is wholly worthless."

8 100. Horace is evidently criticizing poems which are

Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly null,
Dead perfection, no more.

For nature form'd at first the inward man,
And actors copy nature—when they can.
She bids the beating heart with rapture bound,
Raised to the stars, or leveled with the ground;
And for expression's aid, 'tis said or sung,
She gave our mind's interpreter—the tongue;
Who, worn with use, of late would fain dispense
(At least in theatres) with common sense,
O'erwhelm with sound the boxes, gallery, pit,
And raise a laugh with anything—but wit.

9 115–116. Examples of all these are found, for example, in Romeo and Juliet.

9 119–10 127. 'In respect of characters you may follow tradition or invent. In either case you have your law. Traditional characters must keep their traditional features. Newly invented ones must be consistent with their own idea.'
Cf. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Or follow common fame, or forge a plot.
Who cares if mimic heroes lived or not?
One precept serves to regulate the scene—
Make it appear as if it might have been.
If some Drawcansir you aspire to draw,
Present him raving and above all law;
If female furies in your scheme are planned,
Macbeth's fierce dame is ready to your hand;
For tears and treachery, for good and evil,
Constance, King Richard, Hamlet, and the Devil!
But if a new design you dare essay,
And freely wander from the beaten way,
True to your characters till all be past,
Preserve consistency from first to last.

9 119 ff. For the whole subject of ancient plays see Moulton, Ancient Classical Drama.

9 120 ff. Cf. Aristotle, Poet. 14. 5: “We must not, however, destroy received stories, I mean e.g. that of Clytemnestra slain by Orestes, or Eriphyle by Alcmæon, but invent for ourselves, and use tradition aright.”

10 125. Cf. Aristotle, Poet. 9. 7: “In Agathon’s Flower incidents and names are alike fictitious, and yet it pleases. So that we must not always seek to keep to the received stories with which tragedies are concerned. It would even be absurd to do so, since even the known events are few and yet please all.”

10 128–135. ‘Real originality in dealing with common things is so difficult that you are doing better to dramatize some of the Homeric story than to start a new plot. There is room for originality still within these limits, in the choice of your subject and in the freedom of your imitation.’

Byron, Hints from Horace:

‘Tis hard to venture where our betters fail,
Or lend fresh interest to a twice-told tale;
And yet perchance 'tis wiser to prefer
A hackneyed plot, than choose a new, and err;
Yet copy not too closely, but record,
Most justly, thought for thought than word for word;
Nor trace your prototype through narrow ways,
But only follow where he merits praise.

10 129. Cf. Aristotle, Poet. 9. 6: “In tragedy we keep to recorded names, the reason being that the possible is credible; what has not occurred we no way believe to be possible, but what has occurred was plainly possible, or it would not have occurred."

11 136–12 152. 'Imitate Homer in the modesty of your beginning, in avoiding lengthy and prosaic introductions, in consistency of story.'

11 136. For the Cyclic poets cf. Mahaffy, Hist. Greek Lit. 1. 85–89.

11 140–152. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Not so of yore awoke your mighty sire
The tempered warblings of his master-lyre;
Soft as the gentler breathing of the lute,
'Of man's first disobedience and the fruit'
He speaks, but, as his subject swells along,
Earth, Heaven, and Hades echo with the song.
Still to the midst of things he hastens on,
As if we witnessed all already done;
Leaves on his path whatever seems too mean
To raise the subject or adorn the scene;
Gives, as each page improves upon the sight,
Not smoke from brightness, but from darkness — light,
And truth and fiction with such art compounds,
We know not where to fix their several bounds.

11 140–142. Addison, as well as Byron, gives this credit to Milton
(Spectator, No. 303): "These lines [the first six] are perhaps as plain, simple, and unadorned as any of the whole poem, in which particular the author has conformed himself to the example of Homer and the precept of Horace."

11 141–142. A paraphrase of the first lines of the Odyssey.

11 145. For Antiphates see Od. 10. 76–132; for Scylla and Charybdis, Od. 12. 73–126, 222–259, 426–446; for the Cyclops, Od. 9. 105–566.

11 146. Wickham paraphrases: 'He no more begins a Diomedeia (i.e. would do so if he wrote one . . . ) . . . than he (actually) begins his Iliad,' etc. Cf. Aristotle, Poet. 8. 3: "In writing the Odyssey he did not introduce everything that happened to Odysseus, e.g. his being wounded on Parnassus, or feigning madness when the army was assembling."

12 151–152. Cf. Aristotle, Poet. 7. 2: "We have laid down that tragedy is the representation of whole and complete action of some compass. . . . A whole is that which has beginning and middle and end." And see note on 1 1–9.

12 153–13 178. 'The first point an audience cares for is a real discrimination of the characteristics of human nature in each of the stages of life. These must be well studied.'

If you would please the public, deign to hear
What soothes the many-headed monster's ear;
If your heart triumph when the hands of all
Applaud in thunder at the curtain's fall,
Deserve those plaudits — study nature's page,
And sketch the striking traits of every age;
While varying man and varying years unfold
Life's little tale, so oft, so vainly told.

14 179–188. 'They must then be set out in action, not in narrative; but this not carried to the extent of producing revolting or marvelous scenes on the stage.'

But from the Drama let me not digress,
Nor spare my precepts, though they please you less.
Though woman weep, and hardest hearts are stirred,
When what is done is rather seen than heard,
Yet many deeds preserved in history's page
Are better told than acted on the stage;
The ear sustains what shocks the timid eye,
And horror thus subsides to sympathy.
True Briton all beside, I here am French —
Bloodshed 'tis surely better to retrench;
The gladiatorial gore we teach to flow
In tragic scene disgusts, though but in show;
We hate the carnage while we see the trick,
And find small sympathy in being sick.
Not on the stage the regicide Macbeth
Appals an audience with a monarch's death;
To gaze when sable Hubert threats to sear
Young Arthur's eyes, can ours or nature bear?
Above all things, Dan Poet, if you can,
Eke out your acts, I pray, with mortal man;
Nor call a ghost, unless some cursed scrape
Must open ten trap-doors for your escape.

14 189–15 192. 'Five acts, no more and no less. A deus ex machina only when the occasion really requires it. Three characters only on the stage at once.'
Aristotle divides otherwise (Poetics, chap. 12). Horace's division is followed by the tragedies of Seneca, which were largely imitated in the Renaissance period, and it is perhaps through this medium that it has reached the modern stage. The division of Roman comedies into five acts does not appear to be earlier than the fourth century A.D.

14 191. Aristotle does not approve of a deus ex machina at all (Poet. 15. 7): "It is plain, then, that the solution of the plot should arise out of the plot itself, and not be mechanical as in the Medea [of Euripides], or the passage about the sailing away from Troy in the Iliad [II. 2. 155 ff.]. Mechanical means [i.e. divine intervention] should be used for things outside the play, whether what has happened before which it is impossible for a man to know, or what happens after which needs prophecy or reporting; to the gods we attribute omniscience."

15 192. Æschylus had introduced a second actor, Sophocles a third (Aristotle, Poet. 4. 13). Horace would allow no more on the stage at a time.

15 193–201. 'On the other hand, the Chorus must be treated as an integral part of the drama. Its business is to help on the action, and specially to take the moral and religious side in it.'

15 193. Aristotle, Poet. 19. 7: "The Chorus should be assumed to be one of the actors and part of the whole, engaging in the competition as in Sophocles, not as in Euripides. In other poets the songs have no more to do with the plot than with a different tragedy; wherefore they sing interludes, a practice first started by Agathon."

15 202–18 239. 'The lyrical part of the drama was simpler in old days. As audiences have become more mixed the music became more elaborate, the diction more stilted, the tone more oracular. (In the same way) the desire to interest a miscellaneous audience led to adding the Satyrinc drama to tragedy. But moderation and tact are necessary. Tragic characters must not be lowered in the following Satyrinc drama. Neither need they rant. Tragedy has its proper dignity; so has the Satyrinc drama itself. It is not tragedy, but neither is it comedy.'

For the Satyrinc drama, see Moulton, Ancient Classical Drama.

17 220–224. Thus translated by Goldsmith, Essay on the Origin of Poetry:

The tragic bard, a goat his humble prize,
Bade satyrs naked and uncouth arise;
His muse severe, secure, and undismayed,
The rustic joke in solemn strain conveyed;
For novelty alone he knew could charm
A lawless crowd, with wine and feasting warm.
17 220 ff. The only Satyric drama which has been preserved to us is The Cyclops of Euripides. See the translation by Shelley, and the analysis in Moulton, Ancient Classical Drama, pp. 197–198. Dryden's account is as follows (Discourse on Satire): "Thespis, or whoever he were that invented tragedy (for authors differ), mingled with them a chorus and dances of Satyrs which had before been used in the celebration of their festivals, and there they were ever afterwards retained. The character of them was also kept, which was mirth and wantonness; and this was given, I suppose, to the folly of the common audience, who soon grew weary of good sense, and, as we daily see in our own age and country, are apt to forsake poetry, and still ready to return to buffoonery and farce. From hence it came that in the Olympic Games, where the poets contended for four prizes, the satiric tragedy was the last of them, for in the rest the Satyrs were excluded from the chorus. Amongst the plays of Euripides which are yet remaining, there is one of these satyrics, which is called The Cyclops, in which we may see the nature of those poems, and from thence conclude what likeness they have to the Roman satire.

"The story of this Cyclops, whose name was Polyphemus (so famous in the Grecian fables), was that Ulysses, who with his company was driven on the coast of Sicily, where those Cyclopes inhabited, coming to ask relief from Silenus and the Satyrs, who were herdsman to that one-eyed giant, was kindly received by them and entertained, till, being perceived by Polyphemus, they were made prisoners, against the rites of hospitality (for which Ulysses eloquently pleaded), were afterwards put down into the den, and some of them devoured; after which Ulysses (having made him drunk when he was asleep) thrust a great firebrand into his eye, and so revenging his dead followers, escaped with the remaining party of the living; and Silenus and the Satyrs were freed from their servitude under Polyphemus, and remitted to their first liberty of attending and accompanying their patron Bacchus.

"This was the subject of the tragedy, which, being one of those that end with a happy event, is therefore by Aristotle judged below the other sort, whose success is unfortunate. Notwithstanding which, the Satyrs (who were part of the dramatis persona, as well as the whole chorus) were properly introduced into the nature of the poem, which is mixed of farce and tragedy. The adventure of Ulysses was to entertain the judging part of the audience, and the uncouth persons of Silenus and the Satyrs to divert the common people with their gross railleries."

NOTES.

18 238. Pythias and Simo were probably characters in a comedy by Cæcilius, the former a slave girl, the latter her master.

18 239. For Silenus cf. The Cyclops of Euripides (note on 17 220 ff.).

18 240–243. 'Do not look for an original story, only for freshness of treatment.'

18 240–242. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Whom nature guides, so writes that every dunce
Enraptured thinks to do the same at once;
But after inky thumbs and bitten nails
And twenty scattered quires, the coxcomb fails.

18 241. Pascal, Thoughts 1. 3: "The best books are those that every reader thinks he might have written himself."

18 244–19 250. 'The chorus of satyrs must keep from low and coarse language; think of the better, not of the worse part of your audience.'

19 248–250. Byron, Hints from Horace:

A vulgar scribbler, certes, stands disgraced
In this nice age, when all aspire to taste;
The dirty language and the noisome jest
Which pleased in Swift of yore, we now detest.

19 251–20 269. 'Metre. Avoid the great fault of the older Roman tragedians, heavy and spondaic verses. Roman poets have been demoralized by inartistic audiences. Neither presume on this nor be slavishly afraid of censure, but steep yourself in Greek models.'

19 251–20 262. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Peace to Swift's faults! his wit hath made them pass,
Unmatched by all save matchless Hudibras!
Whose author is perhaps the first we meet
Who from our couplet lopped two final feet;
Nor less in merit than the longer line,
This measure moves a favorite of the Nine.
Though at first view eight feet may seem in vain
Formed, save in ode, to bear a serious strain,
Yet Scott has shown our wondering isle of late
This measure shrinks not from a theme of weight,
And, varied skilfully, surpasses far
Heroic rime, but most in love and war;
Whose fluctuations, tender or sublime,
Are curbed too much by long-recurring rime.
HORACE.

19 281 ff. A similar lesson in English metrical feet is given by Coleridge:

Trochee trips from long to short;
From long to long in solemn sort
Slow Spondee stalks; strong foot! yet ill able Ever to come up with Dactyl trisyllable.
Iambics march from short to long; —
With a leap and a bound the swift Anapaests throng;
One syllable long, with one short at each side,
Amphibrachys hastes with a stately stride; —
First and last being long, middle short, Amphimacer
Strikes his thundering hoofs like a proud high-bred racer.

20 285–289. Byron, Hints from Horace:

And must the bard his glowing thoughts confine,
Lest censure hover o'er some faulty line?
Remove whate'er a critic may suspect,
To gain the paltry suffrage of 'correct'?
Or prune the spirit of each daring phrase,
To fly from error, not to merit praise?
Ye who seek finished models, never cease
By day and night to read the works of Greece.

20 288–289. Pope, Essay on Criticism 124–129:

Be Homer's works your study and delight,
Read them by day, and meditate by night;
Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring,
And trace the Muses upward to their spring.
Still, with itself compared, his text peruse,
And let your comment be the Mantuan Muse.

20 270–21 274. 'No doubt your ancestors put up with and praised Plautus for his rhythms as well as his wit; but they were too indulgent in both points. We should know the rules of art better.'

20 270–21 274. Byron, Hints from Horace:

But our good fathers never bent their brains
To heathen Greek, content with native strains.
The few who read a page, or used a pen,
Were satisfied with Chaucer and old Ben;
The jokes and numbers suited to their taste
Were quaint and careless, anything but chaste;
Yet whether right or wrong the ancient rules,
It will not do to call our fathers fools!
Though you and I, who eruditely know
To separate the elegant and low,
Can also, when a hobbling line appears,
Detect with fingers, in default of ears.

21 275–284. ‘The Greeks are the masters: they invented the drama and perfected it, tragedy and even comedy, from the too free criticism of the older type to the more sober and toothless new comedy of manners.’

Thespis, inventor of dramatic art,
Conveyed his vagrant actors in a cart;
High o’er the crowd the mimic tribe appeared,
And played and sung, with lees of wine besmeared.

21 281–284. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Old comedies still meet with much applause,
Though too licentious for dramatic laws;
At least, we moderns, wisely, ’tis confessed,
Curtail or silence the lascivious jest.

21 281. Aristophanes is the representative of the Old Comedy. An excellent translation of his Acharnians, Knights, and Birds is Frere’s, published in Morley’s Universal Library (Routledge).

21 285–22 294. ‘But our countrymen have imitated every phase, and have struck out lines of their own both in tragedy and comedy. Indeed, Rome would rival Greece in literature as in arms, were it not for our laziness in perfecting our work.’

Translated by Byron, Hints from Horace:

Whate’er their follies, and their faults beside,
Our enterprising bards pass naught untried;
Nor do they merit slight applause who choose
An English subject for an English muse,
And leave to minds which never dared invent,
French flippancy and German sentiment.
Where is that living language which could claim
Poetic more, as philosophic, fame,
If all our bards, more patient of delay,
Would stop, like Pope, to polish by the way?

22 295–301. ‘This laziness is reduced to a theory. Men undervalue art in comparison with the native gift, and look on that as the antithesis of common sense.’
22 296. Cf. Plato, Phaedrus 245 (Jowett's translation, 2. 121-122): "There is also a third kind of madness, of those who are possessed by the Muses; which enters into a delicate and virgin soul, and there inspiring frenzy, awakens lyrical and all other numbers; with these adorning the myriad actions of ancient heroes for the instruction of posterity. But he who, having no touch of the Muses' madness in his soul, comes to the door and thinks that he will get into the temple by the help of art—he, I say, and his poetry are not admitted; the sane man is nowhere at all when he enters into rivalry with the madman." See also my edition of Shelley's Defense of Poetry, notes on 40 23-25 and 23 6, and the discussion on pp. xx-xxv.

22 297. Democritus. Cicero, Character of the Orator 2. 46. 194: "I have often heard that no man can be a good poet (as they say is left recorded in the writings of both Democritus and Plato) without ardor of imagination, and the excitement of something similar to frenzy." Cf. Cicero On Divination 1. 37. 80.

But truth to say, most rimerers rarely guard
Against that ridicule they deem so hard;
In person negligent, they wear, from sloth,
Beards of a week and nails of annual growth;
Reside in garrets, fly from those they meet,
And walk in alleys rather than the street.

22 300. Anticyra, a town in Phocis, was celebrated for producing hellebore, believed to be a cure for insanity.

22 301-23 308. 'As I cannot follow them, I have given up writing poetry myself, but I am trying to teach others to write it, as a whetstone makes knives cut, though it cannot cut itself.'

23 304-308. Byron, Hints from Horace:

But since (perhaps my feelings are too nice)
I cannot purchase fame at such a price,
I'll labor gratis as a grinder's wheel,
And, blunt myself, give edge to others' steel,
Nor write at all, unless to teach the art
To those rehearsing for the poet's part;
From Horace show the pleasing paths of song,
And from my own example—what is wrong.

23 304. A similar use of the figure is ascribed to Isocrates, in the life of that orator formerly attributed to Plutarch. Being asked why he did not speak in public, since he taught the art of public speaking to others, he is said to have replied (Lives of the Ten Orators, p. 838 E): "So whetstones cannot cut, but they give a cutting edge to steel."

23 300–24 318. 'Good writing begins in good thinking. Read Plato, understand human life, draw direct from that, and then your characters will speak like living beings.'

23 300–311. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Though modern practice sometimes differs quite,
"Tis just as well to think before you write;
Let every book that suits your theme be read,
So shall you trace it to the fountain-head.

23 309. Wickham says, in his note on the passage: "These lines seem to give a keynote to the Ars Poetica. It is the reconciliation of the breach, if it ever was a serious one, between Horace's literary and philosophical inclinations. . . . 'Sound poetry' ('scribendi recte . . . '), so far from being the product of a crazed brain, has behind it sound thinking, the trained intelligence of the philosopher, at second hand from the study of books (v. 310), and at first hand from the study of life (v. 317)." And again in his edition of the Works, 2. 335: "Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons is the motto of the Ars Poetica. . . . It is as though Horace's two tastes and interests had run at last into one stream. Philosophy is no longer the rival of poetry, but has become her instructor."

Other Latin authors afford confirmation of Horace's statement. Thus Cato (Jordan's ed., p. 80): "Lay hold of the subject, and the words will follow" (rem tene, verba sequentur); Cicero, Character of the Orator 3. 31. 125: "Copiousness of matter produces copiousness of language" (the whole of the thirty-first chapter should be consulted). Nor have some of the best modern authors failed to echo this opinion. See, in particular, Lewes' Principles of Success in Literature. Thus Dryden, Discourse on Epic Poetry: "And whereas poems which are produced by the vigor of imagination only have a gloss upon them at the first (which time wears off), the works of judgment are like the diamond, the more they are polished the more lustre they receive. . . . Such a sort of reputation is my aim, though in a far inferior degree." And to the same effect Sir Walter Scott, Life of Dryden (ed. Saintsbury), pp. 402–403: "The distinguishing characteristic of Dryden's genius seems to have been the power of reasoning, and of expressing the result in appropriate language. This may seem slender praise; yet these were the talents that led Bacon into the recesses of philosophy, and conducted Newton to the cabinet of nature. The prose works of Dryden bear repeated evidence to his philosophical powers. . .
This power of ratiocination, of investigating, discovering, and appreciating that which is really excellent, if accompanied with the necessary command of fanciful illustration and elegant expression, is the most interesting quality which can be possessed by a poet. It must indeed have a share in the composition of everything that is truly estimable in the fine arts, as well as in philosophy. Nothing is so easily attained as the power of presenting the extrinsic qualities of fine painting, fine music, or fine poetry; the beauty of color and outline, the combination of notes, the melody of versification, may be imitated by artists of mediocrity; and many will view, hear, or peruse their performances, without being able positively to discover why they should not, since composed according to all the rules, afford pleasure equal to those of Raphael, Handel, or Dryden. The deficiency lies in the vivifying spirit, which, like alcohol, may be reduced to the same principle in all, though it assumes such varied qualities from the mode in which it is exerted or combined."

24 317. Pope, Essay on Criticism 68–79:

First follow Nature, and your judgment frame
By her just standard, which is still the same;
Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchanged, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of Art.
Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without show, and without pomp presides.
In some fair body thus the informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigor fills the whole,
Each motion guides, and every nerve sustains;
Itself unseen, but in the effects, remains.

24 319–25 332. ‘Roman audiences give even a disproportionate value to good sentiments and morals, and too little to poetic beauty. This is the result of our vulgarizing practical education.’

For another rendering see Byron, Hints from Horace:

Sometimes a sprightly wit, and tale well told,
Without much grace, or weight, or art, will hold
A longer empire o'er the public mind
Than sounding trifles, empty, though refined.
Unhappy Greece! thy sons of ancient days
The muse may celebrate with perfect praise,
Whose generous children narrowed not their hearts
With commerce, given alone to arms and arts.
Our boys (save those whom public schools compel
To 'long and short' before they're taught to spell)
From frugal fathers soon imbibe by rote
'A penny saved, my lad,' 's a penny got.'
'Babe of a city birth! from sixpence take
The third, how much will the remainder make?' —
'A groat.' — 'Ah, bravo! Dick hath done the sum!
He'll swell my fifty thousand to a plum.'
They whose young souls receive this rust betimes,
'Tis clear, are fit for any thing but rimes;
And Locke will tell you that the father's right
Who hides all verses from his children's sight;
For poets (says this sage, and many more,) Make sad mechanics with their lyric lore;
And Delphi now, however rich of old,
Discovers little silver and less gold, Because Parnassus, though a mount divine,
Is poor as Irus, or an Irish mine.

24 319. Not so much 'set off with sentiment,' as with 'sentiments,' that is, 'maxims,' 'commonplaces,' 'gnomic sayings.' Shakespeare abounds in examples, such as Oth. 3. 3. 155–161. Most familiar quotations from him are of this sort; cf. Bartlett's or any similar dictionary.

24 323. Ore rotundo. Not 'orotund,' but 'well-rounded,' 'compact,' 'pithy,' 'polished.'

24 325 ff. Cf. the excessive time allotted to arithmetic in many of our American schools.

25 333–346. 'There are in truth two aims in poetry, instruction and pleasure. When you would teach remember the importance of brevity; when you would please remember the importance of verisimilitude. But if you would gratify all your audience you must combine both aims. This is the true classical poetry that lives.'

Two objects always should the poet move,
Or one or both, — to please or to improve.
Whate'er you teach, be brief, if you design
For our remembrance your didactic line;
Redundance places memory on the rack,
For brains may be o'erloaded, like the back.
Fiction does best when taught to look like truth,
And fairy tales bubble none but youth;
Expect no credit for too wondrous tales,
Since Jonas only springs alive from whales!
Young men with aught but elegance dispense;
Maturer years require a little sense.
To end at once:—that bard for all is fit,
Who mingles well instruction with his wit.

25 333–334. (Cf. 343–344.) So Shelley, Defense of Poetry, 13 15 ff. (cf. note on 13 23–24), and Sidney, Defense of Poesy (see the Introduction to my edition, pp. xxviii–xxxix.). How, in the face of such a consensus of opinion, a modern writer on comparative literature can restrict the function of literature to the giving of pleasure, is not quite apparent. Posnett (Comparative Literature, pp. 18–19) defines literature "as consisting of works which, whether in verse or prose, are the handicraft of imagination rather than reflection, aim at the pleasure of the greatest possible number of the nation rather than instruction and practical effects, and appeal to general rather than specialized knowledge." He refers to Palgrave (Songs and Sonnets of Shakspere, p. 237) as saying that "pleasure is the object of poetry; and the best fulfilment of its task is the greatest pleasure of the greatest number." One would wish to know how such sentiments can be reconciled with Matthew Arnold's view of poetry as a criticism of life (in Ward's English Poets i. xix. ff., and elsewhere), and with Milton's "fit audience find, though few" (P. L. 7. 31).

25 340. The 'Lamia' was 'a monster said to feed on man's flesh, a bugbear to frighten children with.' See Aristophanes, Wasps 1177, and Keats' Lamia.

25 345. Sosii. Brothers in partnership as booksellers.

26 347–350. 'Do not suppose I expect an impossible perfection, but I draw a distinction between the bad poet who is occasionally good, and the good poet who is, if so be, occasionally less good.'

26 347–353. Pope, Essay on Criticism 253–262:

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be.
In every work regard the writer's end,
Since none can compass more than they intend;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due;
As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
To avoid great errors must the less commit:
Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays,
For not to know some trifles is a praise.
26 351–356. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Where frequent beauties strike the reader's view
We must not quarrel for a blot or two,
But pardon equally to books or men
The slips of human nature and the pen.
Yet if an author, spite of foe or friend,
Despises all advice too much to mend,
But ever twangs the same discordant string,
Give him no quarter, howsoe'er he sing.

Well had it been for Philip's warlike son
If Chœrilus had ne'er his favor won,
Nor to the conqueror of the world had sold
His doggerel lines for Macedonian gold.
For homely verse the purest fame will spot,
Sure as ink handled leaves behind a blot.
But he, in choice of bards so little nice,
Who such a poem bought at such a price,—
This very king, we're told, ordained by law
None but Apelles should his semblance draw,
And that Lysippus' hand should mold alone
Great Alexander's shape in brass or stone.

27 360–365. 'There is in poetry as in painting a difference between aims, between a sketch and a finished picture.'

27 360–364. Pope, Essay on Criticism 171–180:

Some figures monstrous and misshaped appear,
Considered singly, or beheld too near,
Which, but proportioned to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace.
A prudent chief not always must display
His powers in equal ranks and fair array,
But with the occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly.
Those oft are stratagems which error seem,
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.

With Pope's rendering may be compared that of Byron, Hints from Horace:

As pictures, so shall poems be; some stand
The critic eye, and please when near at hand,
But others at a distance strike the sight;
This seeks the shade, but that demands the light,
Nor dreads the connoisseur's fastidious view,
But, ten times scrutinized, is ten times new.

27 361. This does not mean that poetry is in all respects like painting, an error refuted by Lessing in his Laokoon. Simonides is said by Plutarch to have established the parallel between the two (De Gloria Athen. c. 3, p. 346 F; Morals 5. 402): “Though indeed Simonides calls painting silent poetry, and poetry speaking painting. For those actions which painters set forth as they were doing, those history relates when they were done. And what the one sets forth in colors and figures, the other relates in words and sentences; only they differ in the materials and manner of imitation.”

27 366–373. ‘Only remember one thing is intolerable in poetry, though allowable in most things, — mediocrity.’

Byron, Hints from Horace:

Parnassian pilgrims! ye whom chance or choice
Hath led to listen to the Muse’s voice,
Receive this counsel and be timely wise;
Few reach the summit which before you lies.
Our church and state, our courts and camps, concede
Reward to very moderate heads indeed!
In these plain common sense will travel far;
All are not Erskines who mislead the bar;
But poesy between the best and worst
No medium knows; you must be last or first;
For middling poets’ miserable volumes
Are damned alike by gods, and men, and columns.

28 374–384. ‘If poetry is not good it is bad, and we are better without it. We forget this too often.’

Byron, Hints from Horace:

As if at table some discordant dish
Should shock our optics, such as frogs for fish;
As oil in lieu of butter men decry,
And poppies please not in a modern pie;
If all such mixtures then be half a crime,
We must have excellence to relish rime.
Mere roast and boiled no epicure invites;
Thus poetry disgusts, or else delights.
Who shoot not flying rarely touch a gun;
Will he who swims not to the river run?
And men unpractised in exchanging knocks
Must go to Jackson ere they dare to box.
Whate'er the weapon, cudgel, fist, or foil,
None reach expertness without years of toil;
But fifty dunces can, with perfect ease,
Tag twenty thousand couplets when they please.
Why not?—shall I, thus qualified to sit
For rotten boroughs, never show my wit?
Shall I, whose fathers with the quorum sate,
And lived in freedom on a fair estate;
Who left me heir, with stables, kennels, packs,
To all their income, and to—twice its tax;
Whose form and pedigree have scarce a fault,
Shall I, I say, suppress my Attic salt?

28 385–29 390. 'Do you remember it [see 374–384]. Do not write unless you are in the vein. What you write submit to some good critic, and do not be in a hurry to publish it.'

28 385. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Thus think 'the mob of gentlemen'; but you,
Besides all this, must have some genius too.

29 391–30 407. 'Poetry has had historically a high mission. It is not a thing to be thought scorn of.'

30 408–415. 'People ask sometimes which is necessary to a poet, natural gifts or artistic training. The answer is, both. You need the gift; but the gift without training will do no more in this art than in any other.' Cf. the discussion in Shelley, Defense of Poetry xx–xxv.

30 416–32 437. 'You can wrap yourself up in your conceit, or you can buy applause from interested critics; but you know how worthless this is and will beware of it.'

32 438–33 452. 'The picture of the honest and good critic, such as was Quintilius.'

32 434–439. Byron, Hints from Horace:

Ye who aspire to 'build the lofty rime,'
Believe not all who laud your false 'sublime';
But if some friend shall hear your work, and say,
'Expunge that stanza, lop that line away,'
And, after fruitless efforts, you return
Without amendments, and he answers, 'Burn !'
That instant throw your paper in the fire,
Ask not his thoughts, or follow his desire.
Yet, if you only prize your favorite thought,
As critics kindly do, and authors ought;
HORACE.

If your cool friend annoy you now and then,
And cross whole pages with his plaguy pen;
No matter, throw your ornaments aside,—
Better let him than the whole world deride.
Give light to passages too much in shade,
Nor let a doubt obscure one verse you've made.

32 441. The suggestion of the anvil has been beautifully elaborated by Lowell (A Winter-Evening Hymn to my Fire):

    How glows again
    Through its dead mass the incandescent verse,
    As when upon the anvils of the brain
    It glittering lay, cyclopically wrought
    By the fast-throbbing hammers of the poet's thought.

34 465. For Empedocles see Symonds, Studies of the Greek Poets

1. 37–64.
33 467–34 467. Byron, Hints from Horace:

    While such a minstrel, muttering fustian, strays
    O'er hedge and ditch, through unfrequented ways,
    If by some chance he walks into a well,
    And shouts for succor with stentorian yell,
    'A rope! help, Christians, as ye hope for grace!'
    Nor woman, man, nor child will stir a pace;
    For there his carcass he might freely fling
    From frenzy, or the humor of the thing.
    Though this has happened to more bards than one,
    I'll tell you Budgell's story,—and have done.
    Budgell, a rogue and rimeseter, for no good
    (Unless his case be much misunderstood),
    When teased with creditors' continual claims,
    'To die like Cato,' leapt into the Thames!
    And therefore be it lawful through the town
    For any bard to poison, hang, or drown.
    Who saves the intended suicide receives
    Small thanks from him who loathes the life he leaves;
    And, sooth to say, mad poets must not lose
    The glory of that death they freely choose.

34 471. Bidental. A spot struck by lightning, consecrated by the haruspices, and enclosed.
NOTES.

VIDA.

39 ff. Throughout his poem, Vida is frequently indebted for plan, thought, or similes, to Quintilian's Institutes of Oratory, which may be found in translation in Bohn's Library. Those interested in tracing out the sources should read the following chapters of the Institutes: Book 1, chaps. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8; Book 2, chaps. 1, 2, 3, 4; Book 8, chaps. 3, 6; Book 10, chaps. 1, 2, 3, 4; Book 11, chap. 3.

40 ff. Francis was Dauphin of France, the eldest son of Francis I. Born Feb. 28, 1518, he was seven years of age when his father was defeated and taken prisoner by Charles V at the battle of Pavia. The next year he and his brother Henry were, by the Treaty of Madrid, left as hostages for their father upon his liberation. They were ransomed in 1529, and Francis died Aug. 12, 1536, at the age of eighteen, while his father was still alive. The Dauphin had been in captivity a year when this poem was published (1527).

42 37. Pausanias, Description of Greece (Bohn's trans.) 10. 5. 7: "But the greatest and most wide-spread fame attaches to Phemonoe, who was the first priestess of Apollo, and the first who recited the oracles in hexameters." Also 10. 6. 7: "... The Delphians begged Apollo to shield them from the coming danger, and Phemonoe (who was then priestess) gave them the following oracle in hexameters, 'Soon will Phoebus send his heavy arrow against the man who devours Parnassus, and the Cretans shall purify Phoebus from the blood, and his fame shall never die.'" Servius, the ancient commentator on Virgil, identifies her (on Æn. 3. 455) with the Cumæan Sibyl.

44 75. Cf. Conington, Life of Virgil (Works of Virgil 1. xxv) : "Suetonius preserves a very important notice regarding the manner in which the Æneid was composed. Virgil drafted it in prose, and then wrote the books in no particular order, but just as the fancy took him." The passage is from Suetonius, Vita Vergilii 23: "Æneida prosa prius oratione formatam digestamque in XII libros particulariter componere instituit, prout liberet quidque et nihil in ordinem arripiens" (Works, as above, 1. xxv, note, and 2. lxvi).

49 154. Sylvae frondosai. These Old Latin endings, and indeed these very words, are found in a fragment of Ennius (Annals 6) quoted by Macrobius, Sat. 6. 2:

Pinus procerae pervertunt. Omne sonabat
Arbustum fremitu sylvae frondosai.

49 155. For Ennius see note on 5 56, and Lucretius 1. 118.

50 168. Cf. Æn. 6. 883.

51 180. Cf. Hor. (30) 410. Perhaps Ovid is meant.

51 181. Lucan? or Statius?

But most by numbers judge a poet's song,
And smooth or rough with them is right or wrong.
In the bright Muse though thousand charms conspire,
Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire,
Who haunt Parnassus but to please their ear,
Not mend their minds; as some to church repair,
Not for the doctrine, but the music there.
These equal syllables alone require,
Though oft the ear the open vowels tire;
While expletives their feeble aid do join,
And ten low words oft creep in one dull line;
While they ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still expected rimes:
Where'er you find 'the cooling western breeze,'
In the next line it 'whispers through the trees,'
If crystal streams 'with pleasing murmurs creep,'
The reader's threatened (not in vain) with 'sleep.'
Then, at the last and only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needless Alexandrine ends the song
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow strength along.

52 193 ff. Cf. Roscoe's Lorenzo de' Medici and Life of Leo X.

53 205. Referring to the invitations extended to the French and Germans. Vida's work was published in the very year of the sack of Rome by the foreigners. For these invasions see such books as George Eliot's Romola, Benvenuto Cellini's Memoirs, and the standard histories.

56 263. The Serius, Ital. Serio, is a tributary of the Adda, which is itself a tributary of the Po. Rising in the mountains of the Valtelline, south of the Adda, and east of Lake Como, it flows south, passing just east of Bergamo.

56 265 ff. Cf. Apollodorus, 2. 4. 9: "Hercules was taught . . . to play the lyre by Linus, who was a brother of Orpheus. The latter came to Thebes and acquired citizenship there. On one occasion Hercules was irritated at being rebuked by Linus, and struck him dead with the lyre. Being arraigned for murder, he pleaded the law of Rhadamanthus, which says that he is guiltless who repels the unjust encroachments of another, and was allowed to go unpunished. Amphitryon, fearing that he might repeat the act, sent him away to herd cattle."

59 310. Tibur is the modern Tivoli, Tusculum the modern Frascati. See Baedeker's Central Italy.

62 349. The Anio formerly parted Latin from Sabine territory. It passes through Tivoli, and empties into the Tiber. For Albunea see note on 74 538; it was either a fountain or a forest, but neither this point nor its exact site has been determined.

69 463–464. For the Batrochomyomachia see Mahaffy, Hist. Greek Lit.
VIDA.

74 629. Cf. Æschylus, *Prometheus Bound."

74 534. Odyssey 14. 327–330 (cf. 19. 296–299): “He had gone, he said, to Dodona to hear the counsel of Zeus from the high leafy oak tree of the god, how he should return to the fat land of Ithaca after long absence, whether openly or by stealth.” The site of Dodona was discovered in 1876. Cf. two books by C. Caraponos, Mémoire sur Dodone et le culte de Jupiter, Naxos, 1877, and Dodone et ses ruines, Paris, 1878.

74 536. Pausanias, Description of Greece 10. 5: “Many various legends are told about Delphi, and still more about the oracle of Apollo. For they say that in the most ancient times it was the oracle of Earth. . . . And we read that Earth delivered her own oracles. . . . But afterwards they say that Earth gave her share to Themis, and Apollo received it from Themis.” Delphi was in Phocis.

74 538. Faunus. Cf. Æn. 7. 80–95: “These prodigies disturbed the king, and so he goes to the oracle of Faunus his prophetic sire, and consults the groves ’neath high Albunea, which is the greatest of woods, resounding with the murmur of its holy fountain, and breathing forth from its dark shade a strong mephitic exhalation. From this grove the nations of Italy, and all the land of Ænotria, look for responses when in perplexity. Hither the priest brings his gifts, and as silent night draws on lies on a bed of skins and woos sleep; then he sees many phantoms fleeting in wondrous wise, and hears manifold voices, and enjoys the converse of gods, and addresses the powers of Acheron let loose through deep Avernus. Here too at this time father Latinus, coming for oracular response, offered in due form an hundred woolly sheep, and lay raised on their skins and on a bed of fleeces; suddenly a voice came forth from the deep grove. . . .” Cf. the Fourth Canto of Scott’s *Lady of the Lake."

74 539. For the Sibyls see Sidney, Defense 5 33, note, and cf. their representations on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, by Michael Angelo. See also the line of the Dies Irae, “Teste David cum Sibylla.”

75 644. Cf. Cicero, Tusc. Disp. 1. 2. 3: “It was therefore late before poets were either known or received among us; though we find in Cato De Originibus that the guests used, at their entertainments, to sing the praises of famous men to the sound of the flute." Cf. Tusc. Disp. 4. 2. 3;
NOTES.

Brutus 19. 75.

80 46 ff. Referring to the Odyssey.
82 74 ff. Hor. (11) 146 ff.
83 100. II. 19. 76–248.
84 102. Od. 9. 316–470.
84 113. Iliad, Bk. 3.
85 119. Odyssey, Bk. 21.
86 138–137. Æn. 10. 310–313.
86 142. Æn. 12. 842–868.
86 145. Æn. 10. 495–505.
88 176. II. 5. 720–732.
89 180 ff. II. 2. 210–277.
89 188–199. On the assumption that Virgil was the standard, and that Homer was inferior as an epic poet, see Sellar, Virgil, pp. 66–67: "Dante combines the reverence for a great master, which seems to be more natural to the genius of Italy than to that of other nations, with a high self-confidence and a bold and original invention. Lucretius expresses a similar enthusiasm for Homer, Ennius, Empedocles, and Epicurus; and by Virgil the same feeling is, though not directly expressed, yet profoundly felt towards Homer and Lucretius. And in all these cases the admiration of their predecessors is an incentive, not to imitative reproduction, but to new creation. . .. The progress of modern poetry was for a long time accompanied—and it would be difficult to say whether it was thereby more obstructed or advanced—by a new undergrowth of Latin poetry, for the higher forms of which Virgil served as the principal model. Petrarch attached more importance to his epic poem of Africa, written in imitation of the rhythm and style of the Æneid, than to his Sonnets. The influence of Virgil on the later Renaissance in Italy is abundantly proved in the works of poets, scholars, and men of letters in that age. Nineteen editions of his works are said to have been published before the year 1500. . .. It was discussed as an open question whether the Iliad or the Æneid was the greater epic poem; and it was then necessary for the admirers of the Greek rather than of the Latin poet to assume an apologetic tone. Scaliger ranked Virgil above Homer and Theocritus."

90 196. Lucretius?
91 215. Æn. 6. 719–751.
92 228. Æn. 8. 626–731.
93 244. Georg. 1. 466–488.
94 265. Æn. 7. 765–777.
95 268. Æn. 7. 655–658.
95 271. Georg. 2. 469.
95 272. Ecl. 9. 40–41?
95 276. Georg. 1. 11.
95 277. Georg. 4. 382–383.
95 278. Cf. note on 24 319.
96 284. Æn. 1. 430–436.
96 285. Æn. 4. 402–407.

On the image of the fly cf. Ruskin, Queen of the Air, §§ 34–35: "But the most curious passage of all, and fullest of meaning, is when she gives strength to Menelaus, that he may stand unwearied against Hector. He prays to her: 'And blue-eyed Athena was glad that he prayed to her first; and she gave him strength in his shoulders, and in his limbs, and she gave him the courage' — of what animal, do you suppose? Had it been Neptune or Mars, they would have given him the courage of a bull, or a lion; but Athena gives him the courage of the most fearless in attack of all creatures — small or great — and very small it is, but wholly incapable of terror, — she gives him the courage of a fly. Now this simile of Homer's is one of the best instances I can give you of the way in which great writers seize truths unconsciously which are for all time. It is only recent science which has completely shown the perfectness of this minute symbol of the power of Athena. . . . But he had seen, and doubtless meant us to remember, the marvelous strength and swiftness of the insect's flight
(the glance of the swallow itself is clumsy and slow compared to the darting of common house-flies at play). . . . Whether it should be called courage, or mere mechanical instinct, may be questioned, but assuredly no other animal, exposed to continual danger, is so absolutely without sign of fear."

On similar comparisons Church says, _Essay on Dante_, pp. 141–144: "He employs without scruple and often with marvelous force of description any recollection that occurs to him, however homely, of everyday life; the old tailor threading his needle with trouble (Inf. 15); — the cook's assistant watching over the boiling broth (Inf. 21); — the hurried or impatient horse-groom using his curry-comb (Inf. 29); — or the common sights of the street or the chamber — the wet wood sputtering on the hearth . . . (Inf. 13); — the paper changing color when about to catch fire . . . (Inf. 25); — the steaming of the hand when bathed, in winter . . . (Inf. 30); — on the ways and appearances of animals — ants meeting on their path . . . (Purg. 26); — the snail drawing in its horns (Inf. 25); — the hog shut out of its sty, and trying to gore with its tusks (Inf. 30); — the dogs' misery in summer (Inf. 17); — the frogs jumping on to the bank before the water-snake (Inf. 9); — or showing their heads above water . . . (Inf. 22). It must be said that most of these images, though by no means all, occur in the _Inferno_; and that the poet means to paint sin not merely in the greatness of its ruin and misery, but in characters which all understand, of strangeness, of vileness, of despicableness, blended with diversified and monstrous horror."

On the general subject cf. Bossu, _Treatise of the Epic Poem_, Bk. 6, chap. 3: "We should not make comparisons between noble and ignoble, between great and inconsiderable things. But what is base and ignoble at one time and in one country is not always so in others. We are apt to smile at Homer's comparing Ajax to an ass in his _Iliad_. Such a comparison nowadays would be indecent and ridiculous, because it would be indecent and ridiculous for a person of quality to ride on such a steed. But heretofore this animal was in better repute; kings and princes did not disdain the beast so much as mere tradesmen do in our times. 'Tis just the same with many other similes which in Homer's time were allowable. We should now pity a poet that should be so silly and ridiculous as to compare a hero to a piece of fat; yet Homer does it in a comparison he makes of Ulysses. And the Holy Ghost himself, which cannot be supposed to have a wrong sense of things, begins the encomium of David by this idea: 'As is the fat taken away from the peace offering, so was David chosen out of the children of Israel' (Ecclesiasticus 47. 2). The reason of this is that in these primitive times, wherein the sacrifices of the true religion as well as of the false were living creatures, the blood and the fat were reckoned the most noble, the most august, and the most holy things.”

With the foregoing compare Addison, Spectator No. 160: “At the same time that we allow a greater and more daring genius to the ancients, we must own that the greatest of them very much failed in, or, if you will,
that they were very much above, the nicety and correctness of the moderns.
In their similitudes and allusions, provided there was a likeness, they did not much trouble themselves about the decency of the comparison; thus Solomon resembles the nose of his beloved to the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus; as the coming of a thief in the night is a similitude of the same kind in the New Testament. It would be endless to make collections of this nature. Homer illustrates one of his heroes encompassed with the enemy by an ass in a field of corn, that has his sides belabored by all the boys of the village without stirring a foot for it; and another of them tossing to and fro in his bed, and burning with ressentment, to a piece of flesh broiled on the coals. This particular failure in the ancients opens a large field of raillery to the little wits, who can laugh at our indecency, but not relish the sublime in these sorts of writings. . . .
In short, to cut off all caviling against the ancients, and particularly those of the warmer climates, who had most heat and life in their imaginations, we are to consider that the rule of observing what the French call the Bienséance in an allusion has been found out of latter years, and in the colder regions of the world; where we would make some amends for our want of force and spirit by a scrupulous nicety and exactness in our compositions. Our countryman Shakespeare was a remarkable instance of this first kind of great geniuses.” The simile to which both Bossu and Addison refer is from the Odyssey, 20. 25–28: “And as when a man by a great fire burning takes a paunch full of fat and blood, and turns it this way and that and longs to have it roasted most speedily, so Odysseus tossed from side to side.”

96 291. Æn. 9. 789–798, where Turnus in retreat is compared to a lion. In the translation, ‘Iliom’ is of course a mistake.

96 292. ll. 11. 558–565.
97 301 ff. Cf. note on 96 291.
98 323. Æn. 10. 225–245.
260

NOTES.

98 324. Æn. 6. 893-896; Od. 19. 562-565.
99 329. Cf. Il. 2. 23-33 with 60-70.
99 337. Æn. 11. 243-295.

100 347. Iliad, Bk. 5.
100 350. Il. 8. 1-27.
100 353. Odyssey, Bk. 11; Æneid, Bk. 6.
100 355. Il. 10. 272-277; 13. 821-823; 24. 290-321; Od. 24. 242-243;
Æn. 1. 390; 12. 244-265.

100 356. Od. 8. 470-586; Bks. 9, 10, 11, 12; 13. 1-16; Æn. 1. 697-756; Bks. 2, 3.
101 359. Iliad, Bk. 23; Æneid, Bk. 5.
101 362. Apollodorus, 1. 4. 1; Hyginus, Fable 140.
101 363. Æn. 8. 184-305.
101 369. Æn. 1. 81-123; 3. 192-204.
101 372. Æn. 3. 137-142.
102 374 ff. Æn. 3. 571-582.

102 384-394. Æn. 2. 298-794.

107 449. Pope, Essay on Criticism 80-87:
   Some, to whom Heaven in wit has been profuse,
   Want as much more to turn it to its use;
   For wit and judgment often are at strife,
   Though meant each other’s aid, like man and wife.
’Tis more to guide than spur the Muse’s steed,
Restrain his fury than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

107 455 ff. Cf. Hor. (12-13) 156-178, (23-24) 312-318; Aristotle, Poetics 4. 2. 3: “To imitate is instinctive in man from his infancy. By this he is distinguished from other animals, that he is of all the most imitative, and through this instinct receives his earliest education. All men likewise naturally receive pleasure from imitation. This is evident from what we experience in viewing the works of imitative art; for in them we contemplate with pleasure, and with the more pleasure the more exactly they are imitated, such objects as, if real, we could not see without pain: as the figures of the meanest and most disgusting animals, dead bodies, and the like.”

108 472-477. Æn. 10. 1-117.
109 480–485. Æn. 12. 1–45.
109 487. Æn. 4. 300–436.
110 488. Æn. 1. 561–578.
110 497. Æn. 2. 77–198.
110 498. ll. 2. 278–332; cf. 2. 188–206.
110 501. ll. 1. 245–284.
110 505 ff. Æn. 8. 369–406.
112 530. Æn. 4. 165–168.

114 566. The poet refers to the invasions of Francis I and Charles V.

115 577. Julius. The Cardinal Giulio de' Medici, afterwards Clement VII. Roscoe, Leo the Tenth 1. 20–21: "During the early years of Giovanni de' Medici [afterwards Leo X], he had a constant companion and fellow student in his cousin Giulio, the natural son of Giuliano de' Medici, who had been assassinated in the horrid conspiracy of the Pazzi. The disposition of Giulio leading him when young to adopt a military life, he had been early enrolled among the knights of Jerusalem; and as this profession united the characters of the soldier and the priest, he was soon afterwards, at the solicitation of Lorenzo de' Medici, endowed by Ferdinand, king of Naples, with the rich and noble priory of Capua. Grave in his deportment, steady in his family attachments, and vigilant in business, Giulio devoted himself in a particular manner to the fortunes of Giovanni, and became his chief attendant and adviser throughout all the vicissitudes of his early life. On the elevation of Giovanni to the pontificate, the services of Giulio, who was soon afterwards raised to the rank of cardinal, became yet more important; and he is, with great reason, supposed not only to have carried into execution, but to have suggested, many of the political measures adopted by Leo, and to have corrected the levity and prodigality of the pope by his own austerity, prudence, and regularity. It did not, however, appear, on the subsequent elevation of Giulio to the pontificate by the name of Clement VII, that he possessed in so eminent a degree those qualities for which the world had given him credit; and perhaps the genius and talents of Leo had contributed no less towards establishing the reputation of Giulio than the industry and vigilance of the latter had concurred in giving credit to the administration of Leo X."

115 584 ff. Roscoe, Leo the Tenth 2. 188–189: "At this juncture Leo X
sions, which contribute so much to success in writing, are frequently made the causes and foundations of opposite failures." Gorgias' 'living sepulchres' are paralleled by Shakespeare's 'Our monuments Shall be the maws of kites' (Macb. 3. 4. 72-73).

Cf. Pope, Essay on Criticism 315-333:

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress;
Their praise is still,—the style is excellent,
The sense they humbly take upon content.
Words are like leaves; and where they most abound
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
False eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
Its gaudy colors spreads on every place;
The face of Nature we no more survey;
All glares alike, without distinction gay.
But true expression, like the unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon;
It gilds all objects, but it alters none.
Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words expressed,
Is like a clown in regal purple dressed:
For different styles with different subjects sort,
As several garbs with country, town, and court.

128 163. Simile.
129 186 ff. Cf. 113 542 ff.

133 234 ff. Cf. Æn. 4. 238-705.
135 267-301. Cf. Hor. (4-6) 48-72.
137 302 ff. Periphrase.
137 309. So Quintilian, i. 5. 66. Cf. Sidney, Defense 55 26, note.
137 311. Perterricrepas. From Lucretius, 6. 129.
138 316. Timesis.
138 324. The author's source is probably Servius on Æn. 1. 347.
140 355. From here to line 454 is perhaps the most original portion of Vida's work. Hallam says, Lit. of Europe, chap. 8: "It has been observed that he is the first who laid down rules for imitative harmony, illustrating them by his own example." Cf. Dryden's thought on this subject of harmony (Discourse on Epic Poetry): "But Virgil, who never attempted the lyric verse, is everywhere elegant, sweet, and flowing in his hexameters. His words are not only chosen, but the places in which he ranks them for the sound; he who removes them from the station wherein their master sets them spoils the harmony. What he says of the Sibyl's prophecies may be as properly applied to every word of his—they must be read in order as they lie; the least breath discomposes them, and somewhat of their divinity is lost. I cannot boast that I have been thus exact in my verses; but I have endeavored to follow the example of my master, and am the first Englishman, perhaps, who made it his design to copy him in his numbers, his choice of words, and his placing them for the sweetness of the sound. On this last consideration I have shunned the cæsura as much as possibly I could; for wherever that is used it gives a roughness to the verse, of which we can have little need in a language which is overstocked with consonants... The Italians are forced upon it once or twice in every line, because they have a redundancy of vowels in their language; their metal is so soft that it will not coin without alloy to harden it. On the other side, for the reason already named, it is all we can do to give sufficient sweetness to our language; we must not only choose our words for elegance, but for sound—to perform which a mastery in the language is required; the poet must have a magazine of words, and have the art to manage his few vowels to the best advantage, that they may go the farther. He must also know the nature of the vowels—which are more sonorous, and which more soft and sweet—and so dispose them as his present occasions require; all which, and a thousand secrets of versification beside, he may learn from Virgil, if he will take him for his guide."

So also in his Discourse on Satire: "But versification and numbers are the greatest pleasures of poetry. Virgil knew it, and practised both so happily that, for aught I know, his greatest excellency is in his diction. In all other parts of poetry he is faultless, but in this he placed his chief perfection." Note Pope's imitation of Vida in his Essay on Criticism, 362-383.

142 373. Cf. Æn. 4. 180.
142 374. See such lines as Æn. 5. 217.
142 375. See, for example, Æn. 3. 658; 4. 181.
142 377. Æn. 1. 588-591.
142 379-381. I have not found Vida's original here. With 380 we may compare Milton, On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 172:

Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

142 385. Cf. Æn. 1. 35.
NOTES.

142 386. Cf. Æn. i. 84.
142 387. Æn. 5. 143; 8. 690; the better manuscripts of the Æneid have ‘tridentibus.’
143 388–389. Æn. 5. 866; Georg. i. 356–357.
143 390. Æn. 10. 291.
143 391. Æn. 1. 105.
143 392. Æn. 3. 581–582.
143 393. Æn. 8. 692.
143 395. Æn. 8. 87–88.
143 396. Æn. 8. 91; 4. 398.
143 399. Æn. 7. 74.
143 400–401. Æn. 7. 462–464.
144 406. Æn. 10. 1.
144 414. Æn. 5. 422.
144 415. Probably referring to Od. 11. 593–600. ‘Magno molimine’ is found Lucr. 4. 902; Ovid, Met. 12. 357.
145 419. Æn. 3. 549.
145 423. Æn. 4. 594; 9. 37.
145 425. Æn. 2. 250. Longfellow has beautifully exemplified this line (Sea-Weed):

When descends on the Atlantic
   The gigantic
Storm-wind of the equinox,
Landward in his wrath he scourges
   The boiling surges,
Laden with sea-weed from the rocks.
   . . . . . . . . . . . . . . . .
From the tumbling surf, that buries
   The Orkneyan skerries,
Answering the hoarse Hebrides;
And from wrecks of ships, and drifting
   Spars, uplifting
On the desolate, rainy seas.

145 428. Æn. 5. 481; cf. note in Conington’s edition.
145 432. Æn. 2. 544.
146 435. Æn. 5. 396.
146 437–438. Æn. 11. 614–615.
147 449-450. II. 3. 221-223: "But when he uttered his great voice from his chest, and words like unto the snowflakes of winter, then could no mortal man contend with Odysseus."

151 509 ff. Cf. Quintilian 10. 4. 3: "Correction must therefore have its limits; for there are some that return to whatever they compose as if they presumed it to be incorrect; and, as if nothing could be right that has presented itself first, they think whatever is different from it is better, and find something to correct as often as they take up their manuscript, like surgeons who make incisions even in sound places; and hence it happens that their writings are, so to speak, scarred and bloodless, and rendered worse by the remedies applied. Let what we write, therefore, sometimes please, or at least content us, that the file may polish our work, and not wear it to nothing."

151 517. See 147 459, and note.
154 555 ff. Cf. note on 89 189-190. A further proof of Vida's exaltation of Virgil above all other poets is afforded by his letter to the citizens of Cremona, dated Feb. 5, 1520: "Our Virgil, whom I regard as easily the first of all poets, not only of our country, but likewise of Greece" (Virgilius noster, quem poetarum omnium—non de nostris tantum, verum etiam de Graecis loquor—facile principem ponimus).
NOTES.

BOILEAU.

159 7-12. Cf. Hor. (3-4) 38-41.

160 17. Malherbe. In his Odes. On these see Lalanne, Notice Biographique sur Malherbe (Œuvres, in Les Grands Écrivains de la France, l. xxiv): "Poetry to order, poetry inspired by the wish to obtain or repay a benefit or a favor, this forms the largest and most important part of his work from the moment when he established himself at Court; and, singular to observe, among this poetry is the most beautiful which flowed from his pen. If ever man had the constitution of an official poet, that man was Malherbe." The last sentence may be abundantly illustrated. Thus, beginning in the year 1609, when Henri IV. was fifty-six years of age, and Malherbe himself fifty-four, he wrote, by order of the King, a series of five poems, to assist the amorous sovrain in his courtship, or to console him for the loss, of the young Charlotte de Montmorency, whom he had married in the same year to the Prince of Condé. The latter was obliged to escape with his bride from the Court. so violent was the King's passion. See also note on 166 131.

Waller. In such poems as To my Lord Protector (1656) and To the King upon his Majesty's Happy Return (1660). See Johnson's Life of Waller: "It is not possible to read, without some degree of contempt, poems of the same author, ascribing the highest degree of power and piety to Charles the First, then transferring the same power and piety to Oliver Cromwell; now inviting Oliver to take the crown, and then congratulating Charles the Second on his recovered right. Neither Cromwell nor Charles could value his testimony as the effect of conviction, or receive his praises as the effusion of reverence; they could consider them but as the labor of invention and the tribute of dependence." See note on 166 131.

Spenser. See Eclogues 1, 4, 6 and 12 of the Shepherd’s Calendar.

Dubartas. 1544–1590. A French Huguenot noble, author of several religious poems, of which the most noted was translated into English in 1598, by Joshua Sylvester, under the title of Divine Weeks and Works. Saintsbury praises him highly (Hist. French Lit. pp. 211–212). See also the account given in Morley’s First Sketch of Eng. Lit.

162 39. Batteux said (Les Quatre Poétiques): “There is not one of these ten lines which does not deserve to be meditated by every one who writes.”

162 56. From Bk. 3 of Scudéry’s Alaric, with the substitution of ‘astragales’ for ‘couronnes.’ In this Third Book, about 480 lines are taken up with the description of a palace, beginning with the façade, and ending with the garden.

162 84. Cf. Hor. (3) 31.

164 86. Apollon travesti. Referring to the Virgile travesti of Scarron. Tabarin was a celebrated mountebank of the period.

164 90. D’Assouci. 1604–1679(?). Translated into burlesque verse Claudian’s Rape of Proserpine, and part of Ovid’s Metamorphoses.

Mock Tempest. “Written by Duffet, a low author employed by the players of the King’s-house to compose parodies on the operas, by which the Duke’s Company at one time attracted large audiences. Accordingly he wrote a ‘Mock Tempest,’ ‘Psyche Debauched,’ and other pieces of the same kind. The first was so indecent that in Dublin the ladies and people of rank left the house to the rabble when it was acted.” (Note in Scott’s Dryden.)

Flecknoe. See Dryden’s poem of MacFlecknoe.

164 98. The Pont Neuf was the customary resort of quacks and Punch-and-Judy showmen.

164 100. From Bk. 7 of Brébeuf’s translation of Lucan’s Pharsalia.
Bridle up, etc. From the Second Week (see note on 160 21), First Day, Fourth Part.

165 106. The line illustrates itself.

165 113 ff. These statements must be taken with much allowance. In some respects the later Middle Age, that nearer Boileau, was inferior to the earlier, and he was misled by confining his observations to the former. But, in general, he was too ignorant and unappreciative of the literature of the Middle Ages to entitle his judgment respecting the earliest masters of the several poetic species to uncritical acceptance.

165 117. Villon. This is a nickname by which is known a poet whose real name still remains in dispute, notwithstanding the numerous investigations of which it has been the subject. His date is 1431 (perhaps later)—ca. 1485. His poetry has of late been somewhat too highly praised. The best known of his poems is a ballade— he has been called 'the prince of ballade-makers'—with the refrain

Mais où sont les neiges d'antan?
But where are the snows of yester-year?

See Saintsbury, Hist. French Lit. pp. 156–158, or R. L. Stevenson's Familiar Studies of Men and Books. His works have been translated into English by John Payne. Swinburne's version of his Epitaph, or Ballade of the Gibbet, may be found in Gleeson White's collection of Ballades and Rondeaux, p. 94. If Villon was the prince of ballade-makers, he was also the prince of rascals.

Fairfax. Edward Fairfax (d. 1635) published in 1600 his translation of Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered (reprint in the Carisbrooke Library, Routledge, New York, 1890); see the article by E. Koeppel in Anglia 12. 103–142. Dryden, Preface to the Fables (Works, ed. Scott, 11. 206–207): "For Spenser and Fairfax both flourished in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; great masters in our language, and who saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who immediately followed them. Milton was the poetical son of Spenser, and Mr. Waller of Fairfax; for we have our lineal descents and clans as well as other families. . . . Milton has acknowledged to me that Spenser was his original; and many besides myself have heard Waller own that he derived the harmony of his numbers from Godfrey of Bulloigne, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax."

Ballades. For the ballade, the triolet, and the rondeau, see Gleeson
White's Ballades and Rondeaux. For Spenser cf. Sidney, Defense of Poesy 47 14-16: "The Shepherd's Calendar hath much poetry in his eclogues, indeed worthy the reading, if I be not deceived."

166 120. Mascarades. The mascarade corresponded nearly to our Elizabethan masque. Strictly speaking, Marot did not rime mascarades, as Ronsard did; the nearest approach to them was his epithalamial and other congratulatory pieces, usually published under the head of Chants Divers.

166 123. Ronsard. 1524-1585. Was the first to imitate the Pindaric Ode in French, illustrated by his practice the theories of Du Bellay's Defense and Illustration of the French Language, and was regarded as by far the most eminent poet of his time. Saintsbury says (p. 201): "Boileau, with his usual ignorance of French literature before his own day, described his work in lines which French schoolboys learn by heart, and which are as false in fact as they are imbecile in criticism." Ronsard was the leader of a band of literary reformers known as the Pléiade, of which Saintsbury justly remarks (p. 197): "In point of fact, the Pléiade made modern French—made it, we may say, twice over; for not only did its original work revolutionize the language in a manner so durable that the reaction of the next century could not wholly undo it, but it was mainly study of the Pléiade that armed the great masters of the Romantic movement of fifty years ago in their revolt against the cramping rules and impoverished vocabulary of the eighteenth century. The effect of the change indeed was far too universal for it to be possible for any Malherbe or any Boileau to overthrow it."

Davenant, or D'Avenant. (1605-1668.) Toward the close of his life poet laureate of England. He was reputed a son of Shakespeare, and is said to have saved Milton's life at the Restoration; the latter story is discussed in Johnson's Life of Milton. Gondibert, his best-known poem, appeared in 1651. Its metre, which Davenant sought to establish as the form of English heroic verse, is the elegiac stanza, of which the most familiar example is afforded by Gray's Elegy. Seen in historical perspective, Davenant appears singularly unworthy of even so much praise as is here accorded him. For the Moss Gondibert see Morley's First Sketch, p. 624.

166 130. Desportes et Bertaut. Saintsbury, p. 214: "The lines of Boileau condemning Ronsard have inseparably connected Desportes and Bertaut, and have given them a position in literary history which is as intrinsically inaccurate as it is unduly high. . . . Neither was made in the least retenu by Ronsard's failure, and it did not enter the head of themselves or any of their contemporaries, till their last days, that Ronsard had failed.”

166 131. Malherbe. 1555-1628. Saintsbury, pp. 275-276: “His first attempt was the overthrow of the Pléiade. He ridiculed their phraseology, frowned on their metres, and, being himself destitute of the romantic inspiration which had animated them, set himself to reduce poetry to carefully-wordedmetricalprose. . . . Malherbe is not worthy as a poet to unloose the shoe-latchet of Ronsard. . . . The influence of Boileau came rapidly to second that of Malherbe, and the result is that not a single poet—the dramatists are here excluded—of the seventeenth century in France deserves more than fair second-class rank.” See notes on 160 17 and 166 23.

Waller. 1605-1687. Johnson, Life of Waller: “He certainly very much excelled in smoothness most of the writers who were living when his poetry commenced. The poets of Elizabeth had attained an art of modulation which was afterwards neglected or forgotten. . . . But he was rather smooth than strong; of the full resounding line which Pope attributes to Dryden, he has given very few examples. . . . But of the praise of Waller, though much may be taken away, much will remain; for it cannot be denied that he added something to our elegance of diction, and something to our propriety of thought.” See note on 160 17.

166 133. Coleridge, in his Table Talk, called poetry “the best words in the best order” (July 12, 1827).

167 147 ff. See Vida (119) 15 ff.
168 171. Boileau has translated the well-known proverb, Festina lente.
168 172 ff. Hor. (22) 292-294.
169 178. Hor. (12) 152.
169 180. Hor. (2) 23.
169 186 ff. Hor. (31-33) 419-452.
173 1-6. An exceptional instance of the employment of simile by Boileau in this poem.

173 5 ff. Almost the only kind of pastoral written at this time was the allegorical, where the great masqueraded as tuneful shepherds. How remote this practice was from that of Theocritus no student of Greek will need to be told. It is Virgil who is responsible for this conception of the pastoral, and consequently for the artificiality which it assumed upon its revival at the Renaissance. The idyl which Boileau has in mind may be approximately represented in English by Pope’s Pastoral. Cf. the latter’s Discourse on Pastoral Poetry. Batteux (Les Quatre Poétiques) would dis-tistinguish the eclogue from the idyl by attributing to the former more action and movement.

173 14. This line suggests Vauquelin de la Fresnaye's couplet in the 66th Idyl of his Second Book, where he is speaking of Virgil as pastoral poet:

Longtemps après qu'il eut quitté l'humble Musette,
Pour faire retentir la superbe trompette.

These lines of Vauquelin apparently refer to those which, in some manuscripts, begin the Æneid:

Ile ego, qui quondam gracili modulatus avena
Carmen et egressus silvis vicina coegi
Ut quamvis avido parerent arva colono,
Gratum opus agricolis: at nunc horrendia Martis.

The Virgilian lines have again been imitated by Spenser, at the beginning of the Fairy Queen:

Lo! I, the man whose Muse whylome did maske,
As time her taught, in lowly Shephards weeds,
Am now enforst, a farre unfitter taske,
For trumpets sterne to chaunge mine Oaten reeds,
And sing of Knights and Ladies gentle deeds.

174 21. In Ronsard's Eclogues, Catin, Carlin, and Henriot stand respectively for Catherine de' Medici, Charles IX, and Henry II. Besides these transformations, he employs rustic nicknames, such as Pierrot, Margot, etc. Cf. Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, in such lines as the opening of Eclogue 9:

Diggon Davie! I bidde her god day;
Or Diggon her is, or I missaye.

Sidney says, Defense of Poesy 47 16–19: "That same framing of his style to an old rustic language I dare not allow, since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazzaro in Italian did affect it."

Randall. Scott says (edition of Dryden, 15. 239): "It is difficult to guess who is meant. Certainly the description does not apply to Thomas Randolph, whose pastoral are rather ornate, and duly garnished with classical names. ... Probably Dryden, if he filled up this name, was content to speak at large, from a general recollection that Thomas Randolph, the adopted son of Ben Jonson, had written pastorals." Phyllis appears in Virgil's Eclogues, 3, 5, 7, 10; Lycidas in Ec. 7; Strephon in Theocritus, Idyl 7.
175 31. In this and line 34 Boileau is apparently drawing reminiscences from Ovid, rather than from the pastoral poets.

175 36. Alluding to Virgil, Ecl. 4. 3:

Si canimus sylvas, sylvae sint consule dignae;

which is thus paraphrased by Conington: "If my theme is still to be the country, let it rise to a dignity of which a consul need not be ashamed."

175 38. For the elegy see Hor. (6) 75–78, and the note. Among its cultivators in France had been Marot, Ronsard, and Desportes. According to Vauquelin (Art Poétique 1. 523), it had been anciently represented by the French lai.

175 61. Probably referring to the "sonnet to Uranie, which stirred up a literary war."

176 64. Referring to Tibullus, 1. 7. 41; 4. 5. 11.

176 68. Cf. Hor. (7) 83–85, and the note. Ronsard, who revived the Pindaric Ode in France, and published a collection of them in 1550, claimed for himself the honor of introducing into French the name as well as the thing (Œuvres, ed. Blanchemain, 2. 10): . . . et osay le premier des nostres enrichir ma langue de ce nom, Ode." But Thomas Sibilet, who had published an Art Poétique in 1549, had already used the word, and Jacques Pelletier had composed the species of poem as early as 1547, not to mention similar compositions of Mellin de Saint Gelais (Pellissier, L'Art Poétique de Vauquelin de la Fresnaye, p. xv): "C'est lui [Sibilet] qui le premier en introduisit le nom dans notre langue; cependant, dès l'année 1547, Pelletier composait des poèmes de ce genre, et Sibilet lui-même cite une chanson de Mellin qu'il ne craint pas de donner comme un modèle de l'ode." But the 'ode' of Mellin was amorous, and not in the least Pindaric. Ronsard confessed himself a disciple of Horace, as well as of Pindar. His theory of the subjects appropriate to the ode may be gathered from his Preface Au Lecteur (Œuvres, ed. Blanchemain, 2. 7): "Tu dois sçavoir que toute sorte de poésie a l'argument propre et convenable à son sujet: . . . la lyrique, l'amour, le vin, les banquetts dissolus, les danses, masques, chevaux victorieux, escrime, joustes et tournois, et peu souvent quelque argument de philosophie." Cowley (1618–1667) published a volume of Pindaric Odes in 1656, a rather tardy following of Ronsard's example. Ben Jonson, however, had anticipated him in writing (1616?) his Pindaric Ode on the Death of Sir H. Morison, which is considered decidedly superior to any of those by Cowley or his school. It was Congreve who, by his Discourse on the Pindaric Ode (1705), was the first to display in English a sufficient comprehension of this form of verse, at least since the time of Ben Jonson. The Pindaric Ode, attempted by him, was not really revived until taken in hand by Gray in his Progress of Poesy (1754) and The Bard (1756). The best American ode is the Commemoration Ode of Lowell. See Gosse’s collection of English Odes.

176 61. Pisa. Not the Italian, but the Greek Pisa, in Elis, the scene of the Olympic games. See Pindar, Ol. 1, etc.

176 63. It was not the ode, but the epic (Iliad, Bk. 21) which brings Achilles to Simois, but perhaps Boileau wishes to indicate that this would furnish a fitting subject for an ode.

176 65. Perhaps referring to Horace, Od. 4. 2. 27 ff. It is in this ode that Horace characterizes Pindar.

176 69. From Horace, Od. 2. 12. 25–28, where the girl’s name is, however, Licymnia.

177 78. Lille was captured in 1667, Dôle in 1668.

178 98. The number of perfect sonnets is still relatively very small.

178 103. Martial furnished the model for the epigram. Originally a form of the elegy (see note on 6 77), it became the regular mold of the inscription, the epitaph, and finally of what we understand by the epigram, which is not necessarily a bon mot, though that character is attributed to it in the following example:

An epigram is, like a bee,
A lively little thing;
Its body small, its honey sweet,
And in its tail a sting.

Here is a translation of a French epigram on Talleyrand:

Seven cities boasted Homer’s birth, ’tis true;
But twenty boast of not producing you.

See The Epigrammatists (Bohn’s edition).

178 105 ff. On these points, or conceit, see No. 62 of the Spectator, and Johnson’s Life of Cowley. Martial abounds in points, and hence they naturally passed into the modern epigram. Cf. also Pope, Essay on Criticism 289–298:

Some to conceit alone their taste confine,
And glittering thoughts struck out at every line;
Pleased with a work where nothing’s just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.
Poets like painters, thus, unskilled to trace
The naked Nature and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art.
True wit is Nature to advantage dressed,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed.

179 113. Boileau had in mind Mairet's Sylvie.
179 122. An Augustin preacher, called André, is specially intended.
180 140 ff. See Gleeson White's Ballades and Rondeaux.
180 143. Madrigal. There are two chief sorts of madrigals, the poetic and the musical. The etymology of the word is in dispute, but the derivation generally accepted is from the Greek μάροπα, a sheepfold. Hence the earliest madrigals would have been shepherds' songs, and thus allied to the pastoral. Accordingly Carducci, the eminent Italian critic, thus defines the madrigal (Studi Letterari, p. 412): "The madrigal is properly an idyl wrought with little images, lively and elegant in proportion to the limitation of its space and the purity of its outline" (Il madrigale è propriamente un idilio lavorato a piccole imagini, tanto più netto e vivace quanto più circoscritto lo spazio entro il quale si gira e più semplice il contorno). As an art-form, the Italian madrigal originated in the earlier half of the fourteenth century, though it must have already existed for a considerable time as a rustic song. It so far partook of the nature of the Renaissance eclogue as to concern itself with the experiences of citizens during their sojourns in the country. Its original form consisted of either two or three terzets, followed by either one or two couplets; the lines were hendecasyllabics, corresponding in length to our blank verse. Petrarch was one of the early masters of the madrigal, as the following specimen, and its translation by Tomlinson (The Sonnet, London, 1874) will show:

Nova angeletta sovra l' ale accorta,
Scese dal cielo in su la fresca riva,
 Là ond' io passava sol per mio destino;
Poi che senza compagna e senza scorta
Mi vide, un laccio, che di seta ordiva,
Tese fra l' erba, ond' è verde 'l cammino.
Allor fui preso e non mi spiacque poi,
Si dolce lume uscia degli occhi suoi.

A beauteous angel, circumspect of wing,
From heaven descended to this verdant shore,
As I passed heedless to my fate unseen;
And seeing me guideless, friendless, wandering,
She stretched a silken snare my way before,
Where the fresh grass had made the pathway green,
Nor did it vex me to be made her prize,
So sweet the light that issued from her eyes.

The Italian madrigal was imitated in English by Sir Philip Sidney in his Arcadia, and the two examples there found may be regarded as the first genuine English madrigals. Drummond of Hawthornden also wrote several madrigals, and may be regarded as the chief English representative of this species. See Schipper, Englische Metrik 2. 886 ff.

The French madrigal has no such fixity of form, and is more apt to be of an amorous or gallant nature. An example is the celebrated one by Clement Marot:

Un doux nenni avec un doux sourire
Est tant honneste, il le vous faut apprendre;
Quant est de cui, si veniez à le dire,
D'avoir trop dit je voudrois vous reprendre;
Non que je sois ennuye d'entreprendre
D'avoir le fruit dont le désir me point;
Mais je voudrois qu'en me le laissant prendre
Vous me disiez, 'Non, vous ne l'aurez point.'

Another is by Fontenelle, on the portrait of Madame Du Tort:

C'est ici Madame Du Tort
Qui la voit et ne l'aime a tort,
Mais qui l'entend en ne l'adore
A mille fois plus tort encore;
Pour celui qui fit ces vers-ci,
Il n'eut aucun tort, Dieu merci.

Madrigals resembling the French, and often indistinguishable from the short love-poem, may be found in Lodge, Wither, Carew, and Suckling.

Already in Italian the madrigal was wont to assume an epigrammatic character (Casini, Sulle forme metriche italiane, p. 48), and in French the liae between the two is frequently difficult to trace. Drummond associates the two in the title, Madrigals and Epigrams. An epigram with the structure of the madrigal may be found in Schipper, 2. 893.

It would appear that the musical madrigal ought to be distinguished from the poetical, though they may go back to a common source. In general these resemble the French rather than the Italian model. Their peculiarity is that they were written on purpose to be sung. They appeared in considerable numbers near the close of the Elizabethan period, and into the reign of James, and occur in such collections as those of Campion,
Bateson, Farmer, Pilkington, and Orlando Gibbons. An excellent selection may be found in Bullen’s Lyrics from the Song-Books of the Elizabethan Age, London, 1889.

181 147. For Lucilius (died ca. 103 B.C.) see Horace, Satires 1. 10; 2. 1; and the histories of Roman literature.

182 162. Sat. 10. 61–89.
182 163. Sat. 4. 72–149.
182 164. Sat. 4. 74–75.
182 166. Sat. 6. 115–132.

182 169. Régnier. 1573–1613. In the edition of Régnier’s works in the Bibliothèque Elzevirienn, the celebrated French architect, Viollet le Duc, gives a History of Satire in France, covering fifty-five pages, in which he traces its obscure beginnings to the twelfth century, recognizes its spirit in the Roman de la Rose, sees in Marot’s Coq-à-l’dne a homebred form of it, and calls Du Bellay’s Le poète courtisan a true satire. Pellissier, in his edition of Vauquelin, considers the latter, however, to have been the founder of the satire regarded as the revival of an ancient species. Vauquelin himself (Art Poétique 2. 718) calls the Provençal sirventes satires.

Chaucer. In Boileau’s sense of the word, Chaucer is not a satirist. According to the common acceptation, the name of Joseph Hall (1574–1656) should be inserted here. In his Virgidiemiarum (1597) he writes:

I first adventure; follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist.

Warton, however, enumerates (Hist. Eng. Poetry 4. 364 ff.) four satirists who preceded Hall, namely, Wyatt, Gascoigne, Donne (1593, but not published till 1633), and Lodge.

183 182. The vaudeville takes its name from Vaux-de-Vire, valleys of the Vire. Its reputed author is Oliver Basselin, who lived in the fifteenth century, and on whom Longfellow has written a poem. His songs were ostensibly collected (ca. 1570) by Jean Le Houx, a lawyer of Vire, but the more recent historians of French literature ascribe little more than the impulse to Basselin, and believe that the vaudevilles which pass under his name are virtually the compositions of Le Houx. Only two or three of them are satiric. Of these I have translated one, the first in Du Bois’s edition of 1821, and here subjoin it.

Sordid greed, come thou not near
When my humble board is spread;
My rich neighbor now lies dead
BOILEAU.

Through thy fault; so come not here,
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

Every day his house he'd close,
And within himself would mew;
Then he'd tightly close the flue,
Fearing that the smoke he'd lose.
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

The old shoes he would not wear
From his girdlestead did wave;
Parings of his nails he'd save,
And the clippings of his hair.
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

On a feast-day it were strange
If he gave a wretch a groat;
Then he'd frown, as lost in thought,
And anon demand the change.
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

When he'd boil a salted fish,
All the brine he'd set aside;
For three meals 'twould sure provide
Is not soup a dainty dish?
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

Straw and flax-hards, piece by piece,
For his winter fire he burned;
If the way he could have learned
He'd have sold his bonnet's grease.
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.

Cider by the tun he had,
Yet he drank but water plain;
Now he's dead, can we complain?
Now he's dead, are we less glad?
Wealthy skinflint is not much;
No, I never will be such.
187 34. Thus Euripides in his Ion, Hecuba, Iphigenia in Tauris, Hippolytus, Andromache, and Phœnian Damsels.

187 39. Referring to Lope de Vega and Calderon. See the former's Arte nuevo de hazer Comedias.

187 42. Thus in Lope de Vega's Valentine and Orson.

187 45. See Corneille's Discours III sur la Tragédie.

187 47. Hor. (25) 338.

187 48. Aristotle, Poetics 9. i: "It appears, further, from what has been said, that it is not the poet's province to relate such things as have actually happened, but such as might have happened — such as are possible, according either to probable or necessary consequence."

187 51 ff. Hor. (14) 182–188. The critics have much ado to extenuate the blinding of Gloucester on the stage in King Lear (Act 3, Sc. 7).

188 55–60. Aristotle, Poetics chaps. 10, 11: "Plots are of two sorts—simple and complicated; for so also are the actions themselves of which they are imitations. An action (having the continuity and unity prescribed) I call simple when its catastrophe is produced without either revolution or discovery; complicated, when with one or both. And these should arise from the structure of the plot itself, so as to be the natural consequences, necessary or probable, of what has preceded in the action. For there is a wide difference between incidents that follow from and incidents that follow only after each other.

"A revolution is a change (such as has already been mentioned) into the reverse of what is expected from the circumstances of the action, and that produced, as we have said, by probable or necessary consequence. . . . A discovery — as indeed the word implies — is a change from unknown to known, happening between those characters whose happiness or unhappiness forms the catastrophe of the drama, and terminating in friendship or enmity."

188 66. Hor. (17) 220.

188 67 ff. Hor. (21) 275 ff.

189 83 ff. Of this De Julleville says (Les Mystères 1. 14): "Les plus habiles s'en tenaient aux fameux vers de Boileau, ou chaque mot est une erreur." Every word is an error — this is a harsh sentence, but the most capable students of the Mysteries will hardly question its justice.

190 83 ff. The best commentary on this passage is Boileau's dialogue, The Heroes of Romance, which he composed in the style of Lucian. The romances satirized are those of D'Urfé, Gomberville, La Calprenède, Desmarests, and especially Mademoiselle de Scudéry. Of the latter the _Grand Cyrus_ and _Clélie_ are the best known. These romances had much influence upon the so-called heroic plays of France and England, the plots of the latter being often taken bodily from the former.

190 105. Hor. (9) 120–122.
190 106. _Il. _i. 348 ff.
191 115 ff. See note on 190 83, and Boileau's letter to Brossette, Jan. 7, 1703.

192 130. Juba is the hero of _La Calprenède's Cleopatre._
192 133–134. Hor. (8) 105 ff.
192 135 ff. Alluding to the opening lines of Seneca's _Troades._
192 138. The Latin is, _Septena Tanain ora pandentem bibit._
192 142. Hor. (8) 102–103.
193 143–144. Hor. (7) 96 ff.

194 162. Cf. Aristotle, _Poetics_ 9. 9: "From all this it is manifest that a poet should be a poet, or 'maker,' of plots rather than of verses, since it is imitation that constitutes the poet, and of this imitation actions are the object."

194 177 ff. _Æn._ i. 1–156.

195 190 ff. Cf. Dryden, _Discourse on Satire:_ "It is objected by a great French critic as well as an admirable poet, yet living, and whom I have mentioned with that honor which his merit exacts from me (I mean Boileau), that the machines of our Christian religion in heroic poetry are much more feeble to support that weight than those of heathenism. Their doctrine, grounded as it was on ridiculous fables, was yet the belief of the two victorious monarchies, the Grecian and Roman. Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars (which is the effect of a superior Providence), but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent, managed their intrigues and fought their battles, sometimes in opposition to each other; though Virgil (more discreet than Homer in that last particular) has contented himself with the partiality of his deities, their favors, their counsels or commands, to those whose cause they had espoused, without bringing them to the outrageousness of blows. Now our religion, says he, is deprived of the greatest part of those machines—at least, the most shining in epic poetry. Though St. Michael in Ariosto seeks out Discord to send her amongst the Pagans, and finds her in a convent of friars, where peace should reign (which indeed is fine satire); and Satan in Tasso excites Soliman to an attempt by night on the Christian camp, and brings a host of devils to his assistance; yet the Archangel in the former example, when Discord was restive and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, has the whip-hand of her, drags her out with many stripes, sets her on God's name about her business, and makes her know the difference of strength betwixt a nuncio of heaven and a minister of hell. The same angel in the latter instance from Tasso (as if God had never another messenger belonging to the court, but was confined, like Jupiter to Mercury, and Juno to Iris), when he sees his time—that is, when half of the Christians are already killed, and all the rest are in a fair way to be routed—sticks betwixt the remainders of God's host and the race of fiends, pulls the devils backward by the tails, and drives them from their quarry; or otherwise the whole business had miscarried, and Jerusalem remained untouched. This, says Boileau, is a very unequal match for the poor devils, who are sure to come by the worst of it in the combat; for nothing is more easy than for an Almighty Power to bring His old rebels to reason when He pleases. Consequently what pleasure, what entertainment, can be raised from so pitiful a machine, where we see the success of the battle from the very beginning of it? unless that, as we are Christians, we are glad that we have gotten God on our side to maul our enemies when we cannot do the work ourselves. For if the poet had given the faithful more courage, which had cost him nothing, or at least have made them exceed the Turks in number, he might have gained the victory for us Christians without interesting Heaven in the quarrel, and that with as much ease and as little credit to the conqueror as when a party of a hundred soldiers defeats another which consists only of fifty. This, my lord, I confess is such an argument against our modern poetry as cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used.”

196 199 ff. Cf. Johnson, Life of Waller: “Of sentiments purely religious, it will be found that the simple expression is the most sublime.
Poetry loses its lustre and its power, because it is applied to the decoration of something more excellent than itself. All that pious verse can do is to help the memory and delight the ear, and for these purposes it may be very useful; but it supplies nothing to the mind. The ideas of Christian theology are too simple for eloquence, too sacred for fiction, and too majestic for ornament; to recommend them by tropes and figures is to magnify by a concave mirror the sidereal hemisphere.”

For the sentiments of the Romantic School, quite at variance with such as the preceding, see such criticisms as Victor Hugo's Preface to Cromwell, from which I quote a few sentences: “There is need, in our opinion, for an entirely new study on the use of the grotesque in the arts. One might show what powerful effects the moderns have elicited from this fertile type, over which a narrow criticism is even yet quarreling. We shall perhaps be presently led to call attention, in passing, to some features of this vast picture. Here we shall only say that, as a foil for the sublime, as a means of contrast, the grotesque is, in our opinion, the richest fountain that nature can open to art. Rubens undoubtedly felt the force of this fact when he decided to introduce into representations of royal processions, coronations, and glittering pageants, the hideous figure of some court dwarf. That universal beauty which antiquity solemnly spread over everything was not without monotony; the same impression, continually repeated, may at length cause fatigue. Sublimity upon sublimity is ill adapted to produce contrast, and we need to rest from everything, even from the beautiful. The grotesque, on the other hand, seems to be a halting-place, a term of comparison, a point of departure from whence to rise toward the beautiful with fresher and keener perception. The salamander is a foil to the undine; the gnome embellishes the sylph.

"And it would also be true to say that the touch of deformity has given to modern sublimity something purer, more lofty, and, so to say, more sublime, than the beautiful of ancient times. When art is in keeping with itself, it conducts everything with much greater certitude to its goal. If the Homeric Elysium falls far short of the ethereal charm and angelic delightfulfulness of Milton's Paradise, it is because there is beneath Eden a hell whose horrors are far different from those of the pagan Tartarus. Does any one suppose that Francesca da Rimini and Beatrice would be so captivating in the hands of a poet who did not lock us into the Famine Tower, and force us to partake of Ugolino's revolting feast?"

Upon this point the remarks of Brunetière (L'Évolution des Genres, pp. 181-182) are significant: "The restoration of the Christian ideal to its rights over sentiment and imagination we owe to Chateaubriand and the Genius of Christianity. . . . By the Genius of Christianity the precept of Boileau, who nevertheless knew the Jerusalem Delivered, if neither the Divine Comedy nor Paradise Lost, stands henceforth convicted of error; its purely heathen ideal is convicted of narrowness, of inadequacy, and especially of coldness. . . . Classical art, we have seen, is at bottom heathen. Its object and its ideal were fixed by the heathens of the Renaissance, and its models have remained for more than two centuries exclusively heathen. So that it was not merely Boileau who was here on trial, but, as it were, the Renaissance itself."

196 213. But Godfrey was not 'always in prayer,' as those who have read Tasso know.

196 217. Referring to Ariosto.

198 241. The poet was Jacques Carel, Sieur de Sainte Garde; only four books of the poem were published, in 1666 and 1670. To us Boileau's objection seems almost childish.

199 251. The Theaid of Statius sings the 'fraternal rage' of Polynices and Eteocles.

199 253. Batteux thinks the Cid of Corneille is open to this reproach.

199 259. Aristotle, Poetics 14. 11: 'The diction should be most labored in the idle parts of the poem — those in which neither manners nor sentiments prevail; for the manners and sentiments are only obscured by a too splendid diction.' See also my edition of Addison's Criticisms on Paradise Lost, 70 22 ff.

200 272. The first line of Scudéry's Alaric (1654).

200 278-280. The opening lines of the Aeneid.

201 291. The Orlando Furioso (English translation by Rowe, in Bohn's Library). Cf. note on 196 217.

201 298. An adaptation of Ovid, Metam. Bk. 11, Fable 2.

202 306. Hor. (11) 148. Boileau was accustomed to cite, as a model of terseness, the speech of Chryses (II. 1. 17-21): 'Ye sons of Atreus and all ye well-greaved Achains, now may the gods that dwell in the mansions of Olympus grant you to lay waste the city of Priam, and to fare happily homeward; only set ye my dear child free, and accept the ransom in reverence to the son of Zeus, far-darting Apollo.'

202 308. Imitated from Quintilian, 10. 1. 112, where it is said of Cicero.

202 313. Boileau specifically refers to Desmarets de Saint Martin, who wrote a poem entitled Cloris.

203 335 ff. Hor. (21) 281 ff.

204 343. In the Clouds of Aristophanes.

204 350. The New Comedy is here meant, of which Menander (342-291 B.C.) was the chief representative. His works, except a few fragments, are lost, but their manner is preserved with sufficient faithfulness in those of Terence.

206 375 ff. Hor. (12) 161 ff.
207 398. See note on 164 68.
207 399. It is Géronte, and not Scapin, who wraps himself up in a bag. See Les Fourberies de Scapin.

Tortoise. “In the Volpone, or Farr, of Ben Jonson, Sir Politic Wouldbe, a foolish politician, as his name indicates, disguises himself as a tortoise, and is detected on the stage,—a machine much too farcical for the rest of the piece.” (Scott’s note.)

208 415. So Demea in the Adelphi, Simo in the Andria, and Chremes in the Self-Tormentor.

208 418. So Clitopho in the play last mentioned.

209 1 ff. In this paragraph Boileau is satirizing Claude Perrault, not to be confounded with his more famous brother Charles.

210 29 ff. Hor. (27) 368 ff.

Counter-scuffle. “A burlesque poem on a quarrel and scuffle in the Counter-prison, which occurs in Dryden’s Miscellanies, Vol. III. It is written with considerable humor, though too long to be supported throughout.” (Scott’s note.)

211 40. For Gondibert see note on 166 123.

211 41 ff. Hor. (31) 426 ff.

212 55. Hor. (35) 474.

212 57. Referring to an actual experience of Boileau with Charles Du Perrier, who one day talked incessantly in church about his own poetry, scarcely pausing at the elevation of the host. Pope has imitated Boileau in the well-known lines (Essay on Criticism 622–625):

No place so sacred from such fops is barred,
Nor is Paul’s church more safe than Paul’s churchyard;
Nay, fly to altars; there they’ll talk you dead;
For fools rush in where angels fear to tread.

212 59. Cf. 170 192.

But where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Still pleased to teach, and yet not proud to know?
Unbiased or by favor or by spite,
Not dully prepossessed nor blindly right;
Though learned, well-bred; and though well-bred, sincere,
Modestly bold and humanly severe;
Who to a friend his faults can freely show,
And gladly praise the merit of a foe?
Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfined;
A knowledge both of books and human kind;
Generous converse; a soul exempt from pride;
And love to praise, with reason on his side?

213 78. Cf. Pope, Essay on Criticism 141-160:
Some beauties yet no precepts can declare,
For there's a happiness as well as care.
Music resembles poetry, in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach.
If, where the rules not far enough extend (Since rules were made but to promote their end),
Some lucky license answer to the full
The intent proposed, that license is a rule.
Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track,
From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
Which, without passing through the judgment, gains
The heart, and all its end at once attains.
In prospects thus, some objects please our eyes
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice,
Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.

213 84. Perhaps hinting at Corneille's Death of Pompey (1641). "The great Corneille," said Huet, "has owned to me, not without some effort and shame, that he preferred Lucan to Virgil." The critic who would learn to distinguish Lucan from Virgil should read the essay on Lucan in Nisard's Poëtes Latins de la Révolution, 2, 73-394.

214 90 ff. Cf. Pope, Essay on Criticism 530-531:
No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Though wit and wit conspire to move your mind.
214 100. Boileau is aiming at the Port Royalist Nicole (1625–1695), who had expressed such views in his Lettres sur les Visionnaires and his Traité de la Comédie.

214 104. Similar opinions have been entertained concerning Racine's Phèdre.

215 111 ff. Imitated by Pope, Essay on Criticism 508–525:

If wit so much from ignorance undergo,
Ah, let not learning too commence its foe!
Of old, those met rewards who could excel,
And such were praised who but endeavored well;
Though triumphs were to generals only due,
Crowns were reserved to grace the soldiers too.
Now, they who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down,
And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools;
But still the worst with most regret commend,
For each ill author is as bad a friend.
To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urged through sacred lust of praise!
Ah, ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critic let the man be lost.
Good-nature and good-sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive, divine.

216 130. Corneille is said to have confessed that this was his case, when, on a certain occasion, Boileau congratulated him on the success of his tragedies.

216 133 ff. Hor. (29) 391 ff.

217 152 ff. Cf. 74 534 ff., and the notes.

217 158. In his Works and Days (a translation by Chapman, and another in Bohn's Library).

218 167. At this point Boileau begins to lead up to his epilogue, which is also a panegyric. He here resumes, by way of contrast with the paraphrase of Horace, what was already virtually concluded in line 132.

218 181 ff. A paraphrase of Juvenal 7. 59–62; the Horatian ode referred to is 2. 19.
218 198. This is the most serious reproach that can be addressed to Racine.

218 200. For Benserade (1612–1691) see Saintsbury, Hist. French Lit. p. 278. He had a knack, in composing masques for the courtiers, of identifying the mythological characters of the piece with the actual characters of those who personated them.

219 183. Scott (edition of Dryden, 15. 263) prints ‘Or,’ which I have changed to ‘Nor.’

220 201. Segrais is now chiefly remembered for his translation of the Æneid, to which Dryden frequently refers.

220 207. The French and English were allies in the war against Holland.

220 209. Mastricht capitulated in June, 1673.

220 213. Dôle, Salins, and Besançon, the three principal cities of Franche-Comté, reconquered by the French in 1674.

_Blessings of peace._ Charles II made peace with the Dutch in 1674.

221 215. In 1672 was formed a league offensive to France, into which entered Spain, Denmark, Holland, the Emperor, and all of Germany except Bavaria and Hanover.

221 215. _Now let,* etc. Does this refer to the fall of Shaftesbury (November, 1673)?

221 220. _Boutefeu._ “A Gallicism for _incendiary;_ in Dryden’s time it was a word of good reputation, but is now obsolete.” (Scott’s note.)

222 226. Pope has imitated these lines, _Essay on Criticism_ 739–744:

Content, if hence the unlearned their wants may view,
The learned reflect on what before they knew;
Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame;
Still pleased to praise, yet not afraid to blame;
Averse alike to flatter, or offend;
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.
INDEX.
INDEX.

[The only proper names admitted are those of authors, actual or putative, and their works. Where, in the translation from Boileau, English names have been substituted for the French, they are referred to by the corresponding line of the French. H. stands for Horace's Art of Poetry, V. for Vida's, and B. for Boileau's. Numbers enclosed in square brackets point to a reference merely, and will usually be found in the notes.]

Accius H. 19 288.
Accumulation of words and ideas V. 4 362-44 74.
Active life must not consume too much of the poet's time V. 65 398-66 408.
Æneid, see Virgil.
Æschylus H. 21 279; B. 189 71-74.
Ages of man, the various H. 12 158-13 178; B. 205 373-206 390.
Amphion H. 29 394; B. 217 149.
Amplification of limited subject, how effected V. 99 342-101 366.
Anaphora V. 127 143-147.
Ancients to be imitated and adapted V. 129 185-136 287.
Annalist, poet not an V. 82 74-77; B. 177 73-81.
Announcement of theme V. 78 17-20.
Apostrophe V. 125 121-122, 126 130-135.
Archilochus H. 6 79.
Architecture of the epic V. 78 17-114 557.
Ariosto B. 201 291.

Arithmetic too much insisted on H. 24 323-332.
Arms, descriptions of 92 228-231, 95 267-270.
Arrangement H. 4 42-45; V. 78 15-16, 80 51-81 59; B. 169 175-182.
Art necessary for the poet H. 7 86-97.
Art of concealing art H. 18 240-243; V. 92 227; B. 213 80.
or genius H. 30 408-31 418.
Athletics compared with literature H. 28 379-382, 30 412-414.
Avoidance of one fault leads to another H. 3 24-31; B. 162 64-163 68.

Ballade B. 180 141.
Barber, one may visit and yet be a poet H. 22 295-302.
Batrachomyomachia, see Homer.
Beauties to be supplied on revision V. 93 247-95 277.
Beginnings to be modest H. 11 136-142; V. 79 30-36; B. 200 260-201 286.

293
INDEX.

Benserade B. 220 200.
Bergerac B. 211 39.
Bertaut B. 166 130.
Blasphemy to be avoided B. 183 187–190.
Blemishes, if trifling, to be overlooked H. 26 347–333.
Boileau painted by himself B. 221 223–222 236.
Bombast to be avoided H. 3 27, 8 97; B. 164 98–165 102, 168 159–160, 192 135–193 144.
Bore, poet not to become a B. 211 49–212 58.
Boyer B. 211 34.
Brébeuf B. 164 98.
Brevity in precept H. 25 335–337.
Butler B. 164 96.
Caecilius H. 5 54.
Catachresis to be avoided V. 127 148–128 162.
Catalogs in the epic V. 94 260–261.
Cato H. 5 56.
Characterization, fidelity of B. 190 103–191 123.
Characters and manners to be discriminated V. 107 459–110 495.
Chariot, Homer’s description of, blamed V. 88 176–89 178.
Chaucer B. 182 189.
Cicero H. 26 357.
Chorus H. 15 193–201.
Chronological order, epic poet not to follow V. 82 74–77.
Cicero to be studied V. 64 385–390.

Climax to be provided for V. 79 37–39.
Colletet B. 219 185.
Comedy, verse appropriate for H. 7 89, 93–94.
general precepts, for B. 205 359–208 420.
history of B. 203 335–204 358.
the Old H. 21 281–284.
Common things difficult to treat with originality H. 10 128.
Comparative literature, study of V. 47 123–128.
Compound words V. 137 305–138 315.
Corbin B. 211 36.
Corneille B. 220 195.
Correction V. 148 473–151 508; not to be excessive 151 509–515.
Country, poet should prefer to city V. 71 486–496.
Court and city to be studied by comic poet B. 206 391–207 400.
Cowley B. 220 195.
Critic, the true H. 32 438–33 452; B. 170 199–207, 213 71–84.
the incompetent B. 212 59–213 70.
Criticism of first efforts should be lenient V. 69 466–71 485.
should be courted V. 148 466–472; B. 169 183–192.
Culex, see Virgil.

D’Assouci B. 164 90.
Davenant B. 166 123.
Decency to be observed V. 112 526–113 541.
Delay in publishing V. 147 455–151 515.
INDEX. 295

Demands made upon the tragic poet
B. 193 145–159.
Democritus H. 22 297.
Denham B. 220 196.
Description should be relevant to the theme H. 2 15–22.
in the epic, to be limited V.
88 106–89 190.
of arms V. 95 267–270.
of nature V. 95 271–277.
tedious B. 162 49–63.
Design must be single and rigidly followed H. 1 1–2 23; V. 87 160–
89 190.
Desportes B. 166 130.
Deus ex machina H. 14 191.
Diction H. 4 46–6 72.
Difficulty of the poetic art V.
140 355–141 364.
Digressions V. 88 166–93 246.
Discovery in the drama to be sudden
B. 188 55–60.
Divine origin of poetry V. 73 515–
76 563.
Drama, characters of, either traditional or invented H. 9 119.
traditional characters of, to be recognizable as such H. 9 120– 124. invented characters of, to be self-consistent H. 10 125–127; B.
191 124–192 126.
traditional materials best for H.
10 129–130; how to be adapted
H. 10 131–135.
characters of, according to age
what to be excluded from representation in H. 14 182–188.
five acts in H. 14 189–190.
the satyric H. 17 220–19 250.
origins of H. 21 275–284.
account of B. 185 1–193 159.
Dramatic characters must not resemble their author B. 192 127–
130.
Drances, description of, mildly
blamed V. 89 186–188.
Dryden B. 220 197.
Dubartas B. 160 21, 164 98.
Duffet: Mock Tempest B. 164 90.
Du Souhait B. 211 36.
Echoism (see Phil. Soc. Dict. s. v. echo) V. 141 335–147 454.
Eclogy B. 173 1–175 37.
Eclougues, see Virgil.
Education of a poet V. 44 82–71 485.
Elegy H. 6 75–78; V. 42 45; B.
175 38–176 57.
Emotion, how produced in reader
or hearer H. 8 99–9 113.
must be roused by the dramatist
Emulation to be incited V. 57 278–
58 285.
Ennius H. 5 56, 19 250.
Envy to be avoided B. 215 111–120.
Epic H. 6 73–74; V. 42 41–42; B.
194 160–203 334.
surpasses other poetry V. 41 33–
42 38.
architecture of V. 78 17–114 557.
names in, should be melodious
V. 138 320–328; B. 198 237–
244.
Epigram B. 178 103–180 138.
Episodes V. 81 62–85 123.
Ethics, its connection with poetry
H. 23 312–316.
Eyes convey impressions more directly than ears H. 14 180–182.
Exordium of the epic to be striking V. 81 60–61.
Exposition of the drama must be clear B. 186 27–187 37.
Extremes to be avoided H. 3 24–31.

Fairfax B. 165 117.
Fame as a reward V. 152 521–526.
Faret B. 160 21.
Figures, caution in the use of V. 127 148–128 162.
use of, in epic B. 201 287–294.
Flecknoe B. 164 94.
Fluency, on what dependent H. 4 40–41, 23 309–311.
Future events to be intimated V. 85 124–87 155.

Gallic words in Latin V. 136 290.
Genius or art H. 30 408–31 418.
necessary to the poet B. 159 1–12.
Gentleness in the teacher recommended V. 54 232–57 277.
Geography, study of, recommended to the poet V. 65 393–394.
Georgics, see Virgil.
Glory, not pelf, to be the poet’s object B. 216 125–219 178.
Gnomic sentences V. 95 278–96 281.
Gombaut B. 178 97, 211 48.
Good fellow, poet to be a B. 215 121–216 124.
Good sense B. 160 28.

Greek, borrowing from H. 4 52–53.
models to be followed H. 20 268–269.
poets, study of V. 47 123.
exiles, modern V. 48 143–49 148.
Greeks have genius and literary skill H. 24 323–324.

Harmony between sound and sense V. 141 385–147 454.
Harshness, example of a teacher’s V. 55 246–56 264.
Hero of epic must be truly heroic B. 198 245–199 252.
Hesiod B. 217 157.
Hexameter H. 6 73–74; V. 41 35.
History of vernacular poetry B. 165 113–167 146.
Homer H. 6 74, 26 359, 29 401; B. 201 295–202 308, 203 326, 217 155–156.
referred to H. 11 140.
preëminence of V. 48 134–140.
digressions sometimes found in V. 88 166–89 185.
Batrachomyomachia referred to V. 69 463–464.
Iliad B. 199 254–255. scheme of V. 81 74–83 86.

[Book 1.
245–284 : 110 501; 348 : 190 106;
Book 2.
23–33, 60–70 : 99 329; 210–277 : 89 180 ff.; 188–206, 278–332:
110 499; 469–473 : 96 286 ff.
Book 3.
84 113; 221–223 : 147 449–450.
INDEX.

Book v. 100 347; 720–732: 88 176.
Book x. 558–565: 96 292.
Book xi. 821–823: 100 355.
Book xv. 35 ff.: 95 273–275.
Book xvii. 101 359.
Book xviii. 290–321: 100 355.]

Odyssey.
beginning of H. 11 141–142; V. 80 46–50.
events in H. 11 145.
scheme of V. 83 87–97.
[Book vii.
470–586: 100 356.
Book viii.

Book xix. 100 356.
Book xxi. 100 353, 358; 593–600: 144 415.
Book xxii. 100 356; 395–396: 98 320.
Book xxiii. 1–16: 100 356.
Book xxvi. 85 119.
Book xxvii. 242–243: 100 355.]

Horace [H. 23 304–308]; B. 181 151, 219 184, 221 228.

Horrible and disgusting actions not to be represented on the stage H. 14 182–188; B. 187 51–188 54.

Hyperbole V. 125 116–120.

Iambic metre H. 6 79–7 82, 19 251–254.

Idyl B. 173 1–175 37.

Iliad, see Homer.

Iliads, not to be attempted by beginners V. 1 69 459–460.

Imaginative power of the poet V. 101 367–103 304.

Imitation of ugliness may be pleasing B. 185 1–8.

Improbabilities to be avoided V. 97 304–98 324; B. 187 47–50.

Incident, superabundance of, to be avoided B. 199 255–256.

Incongruity not allowable II. 1 1–2 13.

Inferior poets to be sometimes read V. 130 196–131 209.
restraint of V. 106 445–107 454.
Instruction and pleasure the double aim of poetry H. 25 333–334,
343–344.
Invented characters to be self-consistent H. 10 125–127; B. 191 124–192 126.
Invention V. 77 11–78 14, 134 264–
135 266.
to be learned from the Greek writers V. 113 542–545.
Invocation V. 391–5, 771–10, 78 29–
79 29, 114 558–562.
Irony V. 126 136–142.
Italy distracted by war and foreign oppression V. 114 563–115 570.
Jonson B. 207 393.
Juvenal B. 181 157.
Knowledge, abundant, required by the epic poet B. 202 309–203 334.

Labor of the epic poet must be incessant V. 87 150–159.
La Morlière B. 211 36.
Lampoons B. 183 181–184 204.
Language to be respected B. 167 155–168 162.
Latin poetry, its history sketched V. 49 149–53 207.
less tolerant of digressions than Greek V. 89 189–190.
poets compared with Greek H. 21 288–292.
Learning, how far to be introduced into the epic V. 90 205–93 238.
Leaves, words resemble H. 5 60–62.

Linière B. 183 194.
Literature, how produced H. 23 309 ff.
Love, the passion of, expels the creative faculty V. 63 364–64 378.
use of, in the drama B. 190 93– 102. admissible in poetry B. 214 97–
215 110.
Lucan B. 213 84.
Lucilius B. 181 147.
Lucretius referred to V. 49 158–
50 160, 90 196–199.
Lyric H. 7 83–85.

Macedonian words in Latin V. 136 291.
Madrigal B. 180 143–181 144.
Magnon B. 211 36.
Malherbe B. 160 17, 166 131.
Malleville B. 178 97.
Marot B. 164 96, 166 119.
Mastery of every department of knowledge impossible to the poet V. 65 398–66 408.
Maynard B. 178 97.
Maxims V. 95 278–96 281.
Mediocrity not admissible in poetry H. 27 368–28 386; V. 62 354–
63 363; B. 209 1–211 40.
Melody of verse B. 165 103–112.
Menander B. 204 352.
Mesnardière B. 211 35.
Metamorphoses described in the epic V. 94 262–95 266.
Metaphor V. 120 44–125 115.
Metonymy V. 126 123–129.
Metre, propriety of H. 7 88–8 98.
Metres H. 19 251–21 274; V. 66 415–
419.
INDEX.

Midst of things, beginning in the H. 11 148; V. 81 60–61.
Minerva, invita H. 28 386.
Miracle Plays. B. 189 81–190 89.
Mock Gondibert B. 166 127.
Mock heroics recommended to the beginner in poetry V. 69 462–465.
Mock Tempest, see Duffet.
Modesty V. 112 526–534.
Molière B. 207 393.
Moods of the poet V. 103 395–106 444.
Motion B. 261 40.
Motive in writing, proper V. 42 50–43 56.
Mountain and mouse H. 11 139.

Names in epic should be melodious V. 138 320–328; B. 198 237–244.
Natural science in the epic V. 90 205–91 219.
Neglect of ancients fatal V. 133 245–134 256.
Nine years’ delay H. 29 388.
Nodding in poetry, when permissible H. 27 360.

Obscenity to be avoided B. 182 171–180, 208 424–428.
Obscurity to be avoided V. 119 15–120 31.
Ode B. 176 58–177 73.
Odyssey, see Homer.
Omens V. 86 142–144.
Onomatopoeia V. 141 365–147 454.
Oratory to be studied by the poet V. 64 379–390, 110 496–112 523.
Orpheus H. 29 382; V. 75 551–76 555; B. 217 147.
Ovid B. 176 55.

Painting, analogies with poetry H. 1 9–2 10, 27 361–365.
Panegyric of the monarch V. 115 571–117 603; B. 219 189–221 222.
Passions, expression of various B. 192 131–134.
Pastoral V. 42 46–47, 69 460–461; B. 173 1–175 37.
Patronage of poets by the great B. 219 179–221 222.
Pedantry to be avoided V. 89 191–90 204.
Pelléter B. 178 99.
Periphrase V. 137 302–304.
Persius B. 181 155.
Personification B. 194 160–198 236.
Perspicuity V. 119 15–120 31.
Phemonoe V. 42 37.
Philosophy how related to poetry H. 23 309 ff.
Pinchêne B. 211 34.
Plagiarism from Greek, laudable V. 113 546–114 555.
gloried in V. 134 257–263.
Plautus H. 5 54, 20 270.
Poetry eventually loved by the pupil for its own sake V. 58 286–59 311.
to be constantly studied by the poet V. 66 409–411.
of divine origin V. 73 515–76 563.
INDEX.

Poets protected by Heaven V. 71 407-73 514.
Points B. 178 105-180 136.
Powers, do not exceed your H. 3 36-4 40; B. 159 12, 160 19-26.
Praise of poetry H. 29 391-30 407; V. 73 515-76 563; B. 216 133-218 168.
Precept, brevity in H. 25 335-337.
Premature development, danger of V. 61 334-339.
Primitive poets B. 165 113-116.
Probability to be observed in tragedy B. 187 47-50.
Prophecy V. 85 124-87 147.
Prosaic souls to be given up by the teacher V. 59 312-61 333.
Prose draft of a poem V. 44 75-79.
to be studied by the embryo poet
V. 64 379-390.
poem to be turned into V.
140 350-354.
Purple patches H. 2 15-16.
Purpose, poems must be judged according to their H. 27 361-365.

Racan B. 160 18.
Racine B. 220 197.
Rampale B. 211 35.
Randal B. 174 21.
Reading as a means of inspiration V. 105 423-428.
Recreation should alternate with labor V. 61 340-62 353.
Reflection demanded of the epic poet V. 87 156-88 165; B. 167 147-154.
Régnier B. 182 169.
Repeated blundering H. 26 333-338.

Repetition to be avoided V. 98 325-99 338.
Revision V. 107 451-454.
Revolution B. 188 55-60.
Rich men scarcely able to find severe critics H. 31 419-32 437.
Rime to be subservient to sense B. 160 27-161 38.
Roman inferiority in poetic art H. 19 256-21 274.
Rondeau B. 180 140.
Ronsard B. 166 123, 174 21.

Scarron: Typhon B. 164 94.
Segrais B. 220 201.
Selection of masterpieces for study V. 47 130-48 133.
Sense to rule the words and rimes V. 139 329-140 354; B. 160 27-162 49.
Sentences V. 95 278-96 281.
Sesquipedalian words H. 8 97, 183 194.
Settle B. 212 53.
Shadwell B. 211 48.
Shield of Æneas V. 92 228-231.
Ships changed to islands V. 98 323.
Simile V. 96 282-97 303, 128 163-169.
Socrates referred to H. 23 310.
Song, a single good one does not make a poet B. 183 191-184 204.
Sonnet B. 177 82-178 102.
Sophocles B. 189 75-80.
Spenser B. 160 18, 166 119, 220 195.
Spondee H. 19 256.
Subject, how to choose H. 3 38-4 41;
V. 42 39-40.
announcement of V. 78 17-20.
to be deeply pondered V. 43 57-61, 66 412-414.
INDEX.

a limited, to be chosen V. 99 339–341.
a limited, how amplified, V. 99 342–101 366.
Suspense, to create and maintain V. 79 30–85 123.
Syncope V. 138 318–328.

Tasso B. 196 209.
Teaching of poetry V. 54 232–71 485.
Ten times repeated, some things shall please H. 27 305.
Terence B. 207 396, 208 415.
Thespis H. 21 276.
Tibullus B. 176 64.
Tmesis V. 138 316–317.
Totality of effect preferable to perfection of detail H. 3 32–37.
Tragedy H. 7 90–91, 8 95–96; B. 188 61–190 92.
Travel recommended to the poet V. 65 381–392.
Trimeter H. 19 252 ff.
Triviality to be avoided in the epic B. 199 257–200 236.
Types of humanity to be discriminated H. 9 114–118, 12 170–13 173.
Typhon, see Scarron.
Tyrtæus H. 29 402.

Ugliness, imitation of, may be pleasing B. 185 1–6.
Usage the law of language H. 6 72.
Unities, the B. 187 28–46.
Unity and simplicity H. 2 23, 12 151 152.

Vanity, the author's B. 170 208–172 232.
Variety of talents B. 160 13–18.
esential V. 120 32–43; B. 163 69–78.
Varius H. 5 55.
Vaudeville B. 183 181–184 204.
Vida's scope and ambition V. 152 527–154 563.
Villon B. 165 117.
Virgil H. 5 55; V. 50 105–51 177; B. 174 29, 203 225, 213 84.
as a model V. 46 111–47 128, 53 204–215.
praise of V. 154 554–156 592.
Culic referred to V. 69 402.

Aeneid.

[Book 1.

1 ff. : 200 279–280 ; 1 156 .
194 177 ff.; 35 : 142 381; 81 123 .
101 200 ; 84 : 142 381 ; 105 .
143 381 ; 267 ff.: 46 115 ; 390 .
100 386 ; 430 486; 90 284 ; 474 .
478 : 112 540 ; 540 ; 861 578 .
110 483 ; 588 491 ; 142 377 .
657 ff. : 46 115; 697 756 .
100 386 ; 740 ff.: 90 280 .

Book 2.

100 386 ; 77 198 ; 110 401 ; 241 .
125 121 ; 250 : 145 425 ; 298 .
794 ; 102 284 394 ; 544 : 145 402 .
682 : 46 115 .

Book 3.

100 386 ; 137 142 ; 101 277 .
192 204 ; 101 280 ; 458 ff.
85 129 ; 545 ff. : 46 115; 549 .
145 419 ; 571 582 ; 102 276 ff.
581 552 ; 143 282 ; 658 : 142 275 .
Book 4.

Book 5.

Book 6.

Book 7.

Book 8.

Book 9.

Book 10.

Book 11.

Book 12.

Eclogues.

[Book 4.

Book 9.
40–41: 95 232.]

Georgics.

[Book 1.

Book 2.

Book 3.

Book 4.

Virtue to be inculcated B. 214 91–96.
Visual influences most powerful H. 14 180–182.
Visualizing power of the poet V. 101 387–103 394.
Vulgarity to be avoided B. 163 79–164 97.
Waller B. 160 17, 166 131, 220 195.

War, whether the poet should engage in V. 65 395–397.

Whetstone, Horace as a H. 23 304.

grow antiquated H. 5 60–6 72.

old ones may be revived H. 6 70;

V. 136 294–137 301.

and ideas, accumulation of V. 43 62–44 74.

choice of V. 129 170–184.

to be subservient to sense V. 139 329–140 354.

Designed mainly to show characteristics of style. By William Minto, M.A., Professor of Logic and English Literature in the University of Aberdeen, Scotland. 12mo. Cloth. 500 pages. Mailing price, $1.35; for introduction, $1.50; allowance, 40 cents.

The main design is to assist in directing students in English composition to the merits and defects of the principal writers of prose, enabling them, in some degree at least, to acquire the one and avoid the other. The Introduction analyzes style: elements of style, qualities of style, kinds of composition. Part First gives exhaustive analyses of De Quincey, Macaulay, and Carlyle. These serve as a key to all the other authors treated. Part Second takes up the prose authors in historical order, from the fourteenth century up to the early part of the nineteenth.

Hiram Corson, Prof. English Literature, Cornell University: Without going outside of this book, an earnest student could get a knowledge of English prose styles, based on the soundest principles of criticism, such as he could not get in any twenty volumes which I know of.

Katherine Lee Bates, Prof. of English, Wellesley College: It is of sterling value.

John M. Ellis, Prof. of English Literature, Oberlin College: I am using it for reference with great interest. The criticisms and comments on authors are admirable—the best, on the whole, that I have met with in any text-book.

J. Scott Clark, Prof. of Rhetoric, Syracuse University: We have now given Minto's English Prose a good trial, and I am so much pleased that I want some more of the same.

A. W. Long, Wofford College, Spartanburg, S.C.: I have used Minto's English Poets and English Prose the past year, and am greatly pleased with the results.

The Introduction to Minto's English Prose.

44 pages. 12mo. Paper, 15 cents. Reprinted in this form especially for the use of the C. L. S. C.

Minto's Characteristics of the English Poets.

from Chaucer to Shirley.

By William Minto, M.A., Professor of Logic and English Literature in the University of Aberdeen, Scotland. 12mo. Cloth. xi + 382 pages. Mailing price, $1.65; for introduction, $1.50; allowance, 40 cents.

The chief objects of the author are: (1) To bring into clear light the characteristics of the several poets; and (2) to trace how far each was influenced by his literary predecessors and his contemporaries.
Sidney's Defense of Poesy.

Edited with an Introduction and Notes by Albert S. Cook, Professor of English in Yale University. 12mo. Cloth. xliv + 103 pages. By mail, 90 cents; for introduction, 80 cents.

As a classic text-book of literary æsthetics, Sidney’s Defense has enduring interest and value; but there is another good reason for the marked attention received by this book. The whole conception of the editor’s work differs from the conventional idea. The notes are not mere items of learning, illustrative only of details. They are intended so to supplement the text of the author and the Introduction that the study of the connected whole, on lines indicated by the Specimen Questions and Topics, shall be a cumulative process, expanding and enriching the mind of the student, as well as informing it regarding the views of a distinguished and representative man who lived in one of the most vital periods in the history of our literature. This idea will make itself manifest as the cumulative process is carried on. Something of the character of Sidney as a man, of the grandeur of his theme, of the significance of poetry, of sound methods of profiting by poetry and of judging it, —ought to be disclosed by study of the book. Everything is considered with reference to the learner, as far as possible; and the point of view is not exclusively that of the grammarian, the antiquary, the rhetorician, or the explorer of Elizabethan literature, but has been chosen to include something of all these, and more.

George L. Kittredge, Prof. of English, Harvard University: It is extremely well done, and ought to be extremely useful.

William Minto, Prof. of Literature, University of Aberdeen: It seems to me to be a very thorough and instructive piece of work. The interests of the student are consulted in every sentence of the Introduction and Notes, and the paper of questions is admirable as a guide to the thorough study of the substance of the essay. There is no surplusage, no flabbiness.

F. B. Gummere, Prof. of English and German, Haverford College: It is a wholly admirable piece of work, and has already done good service in my class.

John F. Genung, Professor of Rhetoric, Amherst College: It is the work of a true scholar, who at every step is mindful not only of the interest of the work as a monument of the past, but of its value for all time as an exposition of the art of poetry. Introduction and notes are alike excellent, and the tasteful print and binding leave nothing to be desired.
Shelley's Defense of Poetry.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Albert S. Cook, Professor of English in Yale University. 12mo. Cloth. xxvi + 96 pages. Price by mail, 60 cents; for introduction, 50 cents.

Shelley’s Defense may be regarded as a companion-piece to that of Sidney. In their diction, however, the one is of the sixteenth century and the other of the nineteenth. For this reason a comparison of the two is of interest to the student of historical English style. But, apart from this, the intrinsic merits of Shelley's essay must ever recommend it to the lover of poetry and of beautiful English. The truth which he perceives and expounds is one which peculiarly needs enforcement at the present day, and it is nowhere presented in a more concise or attractive form.

John F. Genung, Prof. of Rhetoric, Amherst College: By his excellent editions of these three works, Professor Cook is doing invaluable service for the study of poetry. The works themselves, written by men who were masters alike of poetry and prose, are standard as literature; and in the introductions and notes, which evince in every part the thorough and sympathetic scholar, as also in the beautiful form given to the books by printer and binder, the student has all the help to the reading of them that he can desire.

With reference to Aristotle’s Poetics. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Albert S. Cook, Professor of English in Yale University. 8vo. Limp cloth. x + 36 pages. Mailing price, 35 cents; for introduction, 30 cents.

The study of what is essential and what accidental in poetry is more and more engaging the attention of thoughtful men, particularly those occupied with educational work. Newman’s Essay expresses the view of one who was a man of both action and theory. Besides this, the Essay is a notable example of the literary work of one who has been considered the greatest master of style in this generation. The illustrative apparatus provided by the editor includes practical hints on the study of Greek drama in English, an index, an analysis, and a few suggestive notes.

Hiram Corson, Prof. of English, Cornell University. In its editorial character it's an elegant piece of work. . . . The introduction is a multum in parvo bit of writing; and the notes show the recherché scholarship of the editor.